Prices Up In June

Consumer prices rose 0.8% in June, the biggest one-month increase this year, according to the U.S. Labor Department. The index showed that for the first three months ending in June, prices rose 7.1%. The index last month rose 9.3% higher than in June 1974. For more details, see story on Page 28.

Ford Oil Plan Gunned Down

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Ford's plan to end domestic oil price controls was shot down Tuesday by the House as congressional leaders planned to enter still another round of negotiations with the administration to resolve the energy stalemate.

The vote was 262 to 167 to kill Ford's gradual decontrol program that would have raised the price of gasoline at the pump. White House officials said gasoline would go up to a total of about seven cents a gallon by the end of 1977 if the plan were passed, but critics put the figure as high as 15 cents.

After the vote, Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield said that Congress and the President "have a duty to get together" to break the deadlock.

As a possible basis for compromise he suggested controls be phased out over four to six years, that Ford rescind his $2 tax on imported oil and that a windfall profits tax be enacted.

House Republican Leader John Rhodes and Senate GOP Leader Hugh Scott also pressed for a compromise.

President Ford said he was disappointed at the House vote but that he would continue to urge Congress to adopt a comprehensive energy program. Ford's decontrol plan automatically died when one House of Congress rejected it.

"We cannot stand still or move backwards," the President said. We must make progress, or the threat to the American economy and American jobs will continue to increase."

He said his plan would have saved energy "while not hindering econcomic recovery."

Congressional leaders scheduled a meeting with the President Tuesday night aboard the presidential yacht Sequoia and a House group was coming to the White House to discuss Turkish aid at breakfast Wednesday. Both events could provide an opportunity for some talk about an energy compromise.

Meanwhile, Commerce Committee Chairman Harley O. Staggers, D-W. Va., postponed until Thursday any further floor action on a bill, vetoed by Ford, which would roll back the price of U.S. oil to $11.28 a barrel.

The House Democratic leadership has said it doubts that it can muster the two-thirds majority needed to override.

Immediately after killing Ford's energy plan, the House headed into continuing debate on its own oil policy act which members hope to pass before going on a scheduled month-long vacation on Aug. 1.

Ford hoped to force public conservation of oil by raising the cost of oil as well as providing incentives for fuel industries to do more domestic research and production.

Speaker Carl Albert, D-Okla., said congressional energy experts have been working with the administration "but up to now we have not come up with anything that will fly."

"Both the President and Congress are playing great defensive games," commented energy leader Rep. Jim Wright, D-Tex. "But it's the third quarter an score is zero-zero."

Wright, head of the House Democrats' task force to develop a party policy on energy, said that even if the leadership works out a compromise, there is no assurance that it could pass.

Ford's rejected energy package would have phased out existing price controls on "old" oil over the next 30 months. Oil from stripper wells — those producing less than 10 barrels a day — would not be affected.

During the 30-month period, no domestic oil could rise about $13.50 a barrel, but after that it would be allowed to go to the world price.

"That would be $100 a barrel, or something else," said Staggers, who opposed Ford's plan. "You don't know," he said pointing to the Republican side of the aisle. "And I don't know."

If Ford's plan were not killed, Staggers said, "every farmer is going to say that Congress abdicated its duty and turned the country over to a President who was not even elected by the people, and is wrecking this nation by veto."

"Old" oil, which consists of two-thirds of domestic production, is controlled at $5.25 a barrel now. It comes from wells in production before 1973. The remainder is considered "new" oil and is allowed to rise to the world market price which is currently in excess of $13 a barrel.

School Budget Approved; Property Tax Will Go Up

By DICK HOLMAN
Star Staff Writer

Property owners face a 4%-plus tax rate increase, to pay their share of a $37.6 million budget the Lincoln Board of Education unanimously adopted Tuesday night.

With no debate and few questions, board members approved the administration-proposed 1975-76 budget, including four last-minute changes calling for an additional net increase of $29,300.

Those include boosts in the travel budget and substitute teacher pay fund, adding the salary for the cultural awareness director after federal funding was denied, and deducting a clerical error of $11,300.

The $29,300 will be added to the $1,034,587 to be drawn from the school district's cash reserves and applied to expenses, the equivalent of about two mills. That will keep the tax-asking figure intact, Supt. John Prasch said.

As adopted, the budget calls for a property levy increase from 47.498 this year to 50.935. That's still tentative, based on an estimated $512 million assessed property valuation in the district.

Robert Den Hartog, associate superintendent for business affairs, said Lancaster County Assessor Fritz Meyer told him Tuesday no firm valuation figure was available yet. Meyer guessed earlier it would increase from $476 million to $506 million — short of Den Hartog's prediction.

If it's closer to Meyer's estimate, the school general fund mill levy then must be increased to produce the same amount of tax receipts budgeted.

Den Hartog said the final levy could vary, then, from 50.935 to 51.23 mills. The increase will range between 3.4 to 3.7 mills.

The final package includes a 10.6% overall increase in pay and fringe benefits for non-teaching staff, for whom the board okayed an improved, standardized pay system.

The board set up new three-year contracts for the assistant superintendents and their pay: personnel, Carroll Sawin, $29,000; business, Den Hartog, $34,000; instruction, Ron Brandt, $34,000. Although Supt. Prasch's contract was not up for renewal, the board also extended it in the three-year package, with a pay increase from $38,000 to $40,500.

Board attorney Edwin C. Perry's retainer of $1,100 monthly was also approved.

Sitting as the Educational Service Unit 18 board, the members approved a $153,600 budget, included in the district's financial operation and requiring .3 of a mill.

The general fund requirement, $25.9 million, is up 9.12% from $22.4 million during the past school year. The grand total of all funds will increase 8.2%, from $33.8 million to $37.6 million.

In other business, the board adopted student transportation policies, with no changes from last year. New, expanded bus routes were approved, serving elementary children who live more than 1¼ miles from school and junior high students beyond a 2½-mile straight-line boundary from school. Information on routes and times is available in Prasch's office.

Readying for the fall school opening, the board approved revised junior high report cards, unlike any in the nation. The vote was unanimous, after some oral reservations.

Board members objected to not requiring teachers to report junior high students' class absences, as will be required on senior high report cards the first time this fall. But the board agreed to a year trial run.

The new junior high forms retain the 1-7 grade scale with explanations of marks, allow individuals or classes to use a satisfactory/unsatisfactory grade option, include marks for conduct, and allow teachers to grade students comparatively, on judgment of progress, and on individual completion of objectives.

Anti-Communists Riot In Portugal

Lisbon (UPI) — Anti-Communist mobs attacked Communist headquarters and beat up party militants across Portugal Tuesday, defying an appeal for calm by the leftist military rulers.

Rumors of a possible breakaway by the Azores Islands in the mid-Atlantic, 1,000 miles west of Lisbon, and reports of renewed fighting in the Portuguese territory of Angola in West Africa added to the growing political crisis.

Police said angry mobs attacked local Communist headquarters and fought with party militants in at least eight towns. Ten persons were injured, three critically.

In the bloodiest incident, mobs overran an army cordon and broke into the Communist headquarters in the northern town of Alcobaca and kicked and beat two Communists inside. One of the Communists shot a demonstrator in the shoulder.

All three were reported in critical condition in hospitals.

The military's ruling Revolutionary Council appealed to the public to halt the disturbances and summoned its 240-member Armed Forces Movement for a meeting later in the week, possibly Friday.

Speculation grew that the Azores Islands were rapidly moving towards a unilateral declaration of independence. Politicans said the overwhelmingly conservative population on the islands was unhappy at the leftward drift of the Portuguese government and wanted closer ties with the United States.

In Angola, National Front troops were reported marching on the capital of Luanda to drive out leftist Popular Movement forces. Fierce fighting was reported 30 miles north of the capital and National Front leaders warned they would attack any Portuguese troops standing in their way.

The current civil strife in Portugal began earlier this month after the Socialists and the Popular Democrats, the country's two biggest parties, pulled out of the coalition cabinet because the military refused to guarantee a Western-style democracy.

Emidio Guerreiro, leader of the left-of-center Popular Democrats, said Tuesday no member of his party would join any cabinet until the military promises to junk proposals to set up a Communist-style "peoples democracy" and guarantees political liberties.

The Socialists have made similar demands and have also refused participation in any government if Communist-oriented Prime Minister Vasco Goncalves is not ousted.

Goncalves held talks with left-wing political leaders in an attempt to patch together a new "non-partisan" cabinet.

Sculpture Permit Won't Be Issued

Grand Island (UPI) — The Hall County Board of Supervisors voted unanimously Tuesday to deny a building or sign permit for the placement of a bicentennial sculpture on Interstate 80 near Grand Island.

The sculpture which has been planned for a rest area near the city is entitled "Erma's Desire" and is one of a number planned along the interstate as part of Nebraska's contribution to the nation's bicentennial observance next year.

Art Thompson of Lincoln, in charge of the project for the Nebraska American Revolution Bicentennial Commission, said it was the first such action he knew of.

Hearings Planned

Last week, the Hall County board went on record in opposition to the Grand Island sculpture and State Sen. Ralph Kelly of that city received permission from the Unicameral's executive board to investiate the matter through public hearings.

Mac Hartman, Hall County building inspector, said after the meeting a building or sign permit is definitely needed if the sculpture is to be constructed within his department's jurisdiction.

Hartman said the unanimous denial may wind up in court but he has been instructed by the board to refuse issuance of a permit of any kind for the sculpture and he will follow that directive.

Thompson declined to comment on what might come of the denial.

People Don't Like It

But he did say he wasn't exactly surprised, because "obviously, there are people who don't like the sculpture."

As to the impact of the decision by Hall County on the whole project, Thompson said he didn't think there would be any harm done.

"I don't think there's anything adverse about controversy," he said.

Thompson also said that as far as he's concerned, "If your goal is to please everybody, you probably schouldn't be involved in art."

Christina Weds Son Of Shipping Family

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — Christina Onassis, heiress to the estimated $1 billion fortune left by her shipping magnate father, married Alexander Andreadis, son of another wealthy Greek shipping family, in a tiny chapel Tuesday night.

The simple Greek Orthodox ceremony was held in a private Byzantine-decorated chapel in the exclusive seaside Athens suburb of Glyfada.

Only 20 persons squeezed into the icon-bedecked chapel — including Christina's stepmother, Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis. Outside, hundreds of well-wishers mobbed the couple as they arrived, chanting the traditional Greek "Na zisete" meaning "Long may you live."

At a news conference at one of the Andreadis family's seaside villas, the couple said they had not yet made up their minds where they would spend their honeymoon, although relatives said the newlyweds would probably head for the luxury yacht Christina, anchored off the Onassis-owned island of Scorpios.

The press gathering was forcefully broken up after fist-fights between police and family aides on one side, and newsmen who flooded the villa's richly decorated premises.

Christina, dressed in a white bridal gown but without a veil over her head, arrived about 40 minutes late, delaying the wedding. She was accompanied in a black limousine by her stepmother, Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis.

Andreadis, with his father at his side, greeted Christina at the entrance of the courtyard leading to the chapel where Father Marios was waiting to hold the ceremony. Christina hurried to her fiance's side and kissed him before the two walked inside the chapel.

Jacqueline, widow of Aristotle Onassis, drew applause from the crowd as she walked into the chapel. She had flown to Athens from the Onassis-owned Scorpios Island where she had been vacationing.

Walking behind the wedding party was John Kennedy Jr., son of Jacqueline Onassis and the late President John F. Kennedy.

As the couple approached the altar, Chistina, in her ankle-length gown, appeared uncomfortable and nervous. However, she relaxed when Father Marios opened the ceremony saying: "This will be the same ceremony for any Orthodox, no more, no ess. I just want simplicity here."

"I met her in Athens several months ago and fell in love with her right away," an elated Andreadis told newsmen as he walked out of the chapel.

Jacqueline Onassis said, "I'm so happy for that girl. They are a wonderful couple. There is a lot of happiness ahead for her after a great deal of sadness."

Andreadis' mother, estranged from his father, said she expedted the couple to live in Greece.

As the couple departed, Father Marios handed each of them a gift, 150-year-old icons of Saints Christina and Alexander.

Police, Fire, Pershing Budgets OKd

By LYNN ZERSCHLING
Star Staff Writer

City Council members appeared enthused Tuesday night over the Lincoln Police Department's change in policy emphasizing the handling of criminal activities more than traffic enforcement.

Acting Police Chief Dale Adams told the council during a budget meeting that the department is placing more emphasis on solving crimes and on getting more officers out onto the streets.

The discussion arose as the council approved the department's $4.3 million budget for 1975-76. No changes were made in the budget by the council. Also approved Tuesday were the Fire Department's $3.4 million budget and a $583,521 budget for Pershing Auditorium.

Squads Favored

Lamakers said they liked the Police Department's squad approach which puts more supervisors out in the field with officers.

Councilman Bob Sikyta suggested that better relations with citizens could be obtained if officers were assigned to patrol on foot outlying neighborhood areas and shopping centers. Foot patrol officers now work in the downtown area.

Adams reported that the department already is checking many businesses on foot now, but predicted that citizens' contact with the police will increase under the recently initiated squad system.

The department only requested two new officers, a police cadet and a meter maid for next year. The officers will be added to the six-man School Resource Officer program.

Four new detective cars, complete with siren, red lights and gun rack, will be purchased for $17,360. Ten older police cruisers will be replaced out of federal revenue sharing dollars, for $45,000. The new cars will be smaller, compact models, in keeping with Mayor Helen Boosalis's directive to all city departments to purchase compact equipment.

For the first time next year the city will pick up the bill for all police officers' and firefighters' uniforms. Up to now, the officers have had to buy parts of their clothing out of their money.

The city agreed to pay the entire bill for the firefighters under terms of a contract agreed to last year. The council agreed to do the same for the police officers, who don't have a union. Both departmental budgets have been hiked $10,000 to buy the additional clothing. Both departments now have budgeted $40,000.

The council approved equipment to staff the new 84th and South fire station and approved $120,000 in revenue sharing money to replace the Fire Department's radio communication system. Fire Chief Dallas Johnson reported that the radio system is in such bad shape one night last week, that calls were coming in from Kansas City.

The council asked the departments and the mayor to study the possibility of consolidating certain equipment with the county sheriff. The lawmakers suggested that one helicopter and joint scuba diving equipment, could be used. Both the county and the city own helicopters and scuba gear.

Mayor Boosalis reported that County Commissioner Bruce Hamilton has asked to discuss those items with her.

Combined Department

Councilman Dick Baker also asked both Johnson and Adams to prepare a report on the advantages and disadvantages of forming a joint public safety division. Baker said several other citites have combined fire and police officers.

The auditorium's budget includes money to renovate the arena and exhibition hall, rebuild the seats in the main arena and complete the heating system.

Walking behind the wedding party was John Kennedy Jr., son of Jacqueline Onassis and the late President John F. Kennedy.

As the couple approached the altar, Chistina, in her ankle-length gown, appeared uncomfortable and nervous. However, she relaxed when Father Marios opened the ceremony saying: "This will be the same ceremony for any Orthodox, no more, no ess. I just want simplicity here."

"I met her in Athens several months ago and fell in love with her right away," an elated Andreadis told newsmen as he walked out of the chapel.

Jacqueline Onassis said, "I'm so happy for that girl. They are a wonderful couple. There is a lot of happiness ahead for her after a great deal of sadness."

Andreadis' mother, estranged from his father, said she expedted the couple to live in Greece.

As the couple departed, Father Marios handed each of them a gift, 150-year-old icons of Saints Christina and Alexander.

Police, Fire, Pershing Budgets OKd

By LYNN ZERSCHLING
Star Staff Writer

City Council members appeared enthused Tuesday night over the Lincoln Police Department's change in policy emphasizing the handling of criminal activities more than traffic enforcement.

Acting Police Chief Dale Adams told the council during a budget meeting that the department is placing more emphasis on solving crimes and on getting more officers out onto the streets.

The discussion arose as the council approved the department's $4.3 million budget for 1975-76. No changes were made in the budget by the council. Also approved Tuesday were the Fire Department's $3.4 million budget and a $583,521 budget for Pershing Auditorium.

Squads Favored

Lamakers said they liked the Police Department's squad approach which puts more supervisors out in the field with officers.

Councilman Bob Sikyta suggested that better relations with citizens could be obtained if officers were assigned to patrol on foot outlying neighborhood areas and shopping centers. Foot patrol officers now work in the downtown area.

Adams reported that the department already is checking many businesses on foot now, but predicted that citizens' contact with the police will increase under the recently initiated squad system.

The department only requested two new officers, a police cadet and a meter maid for next year. The officers will be added to the six-man School Resource Officer program.

Four new detective cars, complete with siren, red lights and gun rack, will be purchased for $17,360. Ten older police cruisers will be replaced out of federal revenue sharing dollars, for $45,000. The new cars will be smaller, compact models, in keeping with Mayor Helen Boosalis's directive to all city departments to purchase compact equipment.

For the first time next year the city will pick up the bill for all police officers' and firefighters' uniforms. Up to now, the officers have had to buy parts of their clothing out of their money.

The city agreed to pay the entire bill for the firefighters under terms of a contract agreed to last year. The council agreed to do the same for the police officers, who don't have a union. Both departmental budgets have been hiked $10,000 to buy the additional clothing. Both departments now have budgeted $40,000.

The council approved equipment to staff the new 84th and South fire station and approved $120,000 in revenue sharing money to replace the Fire Department's radio communication system. Fire Chief Dallas Johnson reported that the radio system is in such bad shape one night last week, that calls were coming in from Kansas City.

The council asked the departments and the mayor to study the possibility of consolidating certain equipment with the county sheriff. The lawmakers suggested that one helicopter and joint scuba diving equipment, could be used. Both the county and the city own helicopters and scuba gear.

Mayor Boosalis reported that County Commissioner Bruce Hamilton has asked to discuss those items with her.

Combined Department

Councilman Dick Baker also asked both Johnson and Adams to prepare a report on the advantages and disadvantages of forming a joint public safety division. Baker said several other citites have combined fire and police officers.

The auditorium's budget includes money to renovate the arena and exhibition hall, rebuild the seats in the main arena and complete the heating system.

Sadat Stalls Sinai Decision

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — President Anwar Sadat stalled a final decision Tuesday on the fate of the U N buffer force in the Sinai Desert and a possible interim peace agreement with Israe.

In an address to the newly elected Congress of the Arab Socialist Union, Egypt's only polical party, he said he would study an appeal from the U N. Security Council to extend the mandate for the United Nations force. The mandate is scheduled to expire Thursday.

He made no mention in his two-hour speech of intense U.S efforts to mold a new troop disengagement pact with Israel, despite high hopes in Washington and Jerusalem for a positive declaration.

Referring to the U.N. appeal to extend the peace force's mandate voted by the Security Council at a late night session Monday, Sadat said. "We are studying the situation from all sides and I shall report to you after meeting with the National Security Council."

Spinning out the suspense, Sadat set no time for his meeting with the ctuncil, which includes Egypt's top political and military leaders.

But the Arab Socialist Union congress ends Thursday

Egypt has not insisted that the sevennation, 3,919-man U.N force leave its desert positions by Thursday and Sadat's words indicated he wanted to leave room for maneuvering.

Foreign Minister Ismail Fahmy said last week Israel was using the presence of U.N. forces to maintain a "no-peace, no-war" stalemate and said Cairo would not approve an extension of the mandate.

The United Nations has taken the position that its blue-helmeted force cannot remain in the six-mile buffer zone between Israeli and Egyptian troops without approval by both Cairo and Jerusalem. Israel, fearing withdrawal of the U.N. force would create a vacuum that would lead to renewed fighting, wants a six-month extension while efforts continue to wrap up an interim peace arrangement.

Sadat repeated Egypt's position that the U.N. force cannot remain in Sinai without his approval because it "would sanctify continued (Israeli) occupation."

There had been optimistic reports in diplomatic circles earlier that he might say a troop disengagement agreement with Israel was highly likely.

In other Mideast developments:

— Israeli Defense Minister Shimon Peres said in Tel Aviv he was "taking seriously" the redeployment of the main force of the Jordanian army opposite Israeli lines. Answering questions in parliament, he said removal on Jordanian troops from the Syrian border to the Israeli front undoubtedly was linked to the recent rapprochement between Jordan and Syria. He added that "while the deployment of the Jordanian army was admittedly of a defensive nature," it could quickly change "to an offensive alignment."

— In Washington, the State Department promised to send the Senate Foreign Relations Committee a scaled-down weapons package for Jordan within 48 hours.

U.S. Disclaims Border Settlement

The New York Times

Washington — The White House emphasized Tuesday that a European security agreement to be signed next week by President Ford and 34 other heads of state "in no way legally settles borders in Eastern Europe.

White House press secretary Ron Nessen, cautioned against what he termed "simple kinds of generalizations" about the agreement produced after two years of negotiations at the European Security Conference.

His remarks were in response to the charge by Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn that Ford was taking part in a "betrayal of Eastern Europe" by preparing to sign the document and in reaction to news accounts describing the agreement as a ratification, in effect, of Europe's postwar boundaries.

Nessen noted that the East-West agreement was not a treaty and that it was not legally binding on the participating nations whose leaders will sign the document at Helsinki, Finland, next week.

The White House spokesman said the agreement would not be submitted to the Senate for ratification, although Ford would "consult" with Senate leaders about it.

Sen Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., later issued a statement charging that Ford was helping to foster "the illusion that substantive progress toward greater security in Europe has been made." He agreed that the Helsinki document "in no way legitimizes Soviet domination" of Eastern Europe but said Ford's signature on it would be "involked" by the Soviets as a "retreat by the West."

The Soviet Union initially proposed the 35-nation security conference in 1954 as a way of determining the involability of postwar European frontiers. The final draft of the agreement stipulates that European borders should not be changed by force. But it also provides that borders can be altered "by peaceful means and agreement."

Nessen said the word "recognize" was deliberately omitted from the agreement on the postwar alignment of Europe, at the insistence of the United States and other Western nations. He said the accounts suggesting the document would affirm existing borders were "somewhat over simplified and over generalized."

Voting Act Expansion Refused

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate refused Tuesday to expand coverage of the Voting Rights Act to all parts of the country.

By a vote of 46 to 38, it tabled and thus killed an amendment by Sen. Herman E. Talmadge, D-Ga., that would have applied its provisions everywhere, instead of mainly against Deep South states with low black voter turnouts.

Talmadge and other Southern senators argued that the current law, and the proposed extension, discriminate against the South.

Sen. John V. Tunney, D-Calif., the measure's floor manager, made the tabling motion as part of a strategy to prevent any change in the House-passed bill to extend for 10 years the law under which hundreds of thousands of blacks have been registered.

He said adoption of any changes in the House bill would risk delays that might prevent final passage before Congress starts a scheduled Aug. 1-Sept. 3 recess.

The bill would extend key parts of the law for 10 years beyond Aug. 6 and also expand coverage to include minority groups that do not speak English.

Sen. Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia, the Democratic whip, submitted an amendment to limit the extension to five years instead of 10.

"I feel it is a reasonable amendment that gives proper consideration to efforts toward compliance with the law in the South," he told reporters.

Parliament Backs Gandhi Emergency

New Delhi — India's upper house of Parliament gave the expected overwhelming approval to Prime Minister Gandhi's sweeping emergency powers, and the main opposition parties then walked out in a boycott of the session, called to ratify the state of emergency. An opposition member said the session could not function as a free and democratic parliament. He cited the suspension of rules under which members could question cabinet ministers, and the government's decision to apply, to speeches in Parliament, the ban on publishing statements by the opposition. The ban applies also to foreign publications but a number of correspondents reported them anyway. Two British and one American newsmen left under an explusion order.

Army Said Testing Two Drugs

Washington — The U.S. Army is testing two halluginogenic drugs on military personnel at the Edgewood Arsenal in Maryland, according to Rep. Thomas Downey, D-N.Y. He said Dr. M. Astronauts Report Fish Births In Space, Yearn For Comforts

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — The Apollo astronauts, in a full day of experiments Tuesday, studied the earth below, reported the birth of fish in space and yearned for the comforts of home.

Thomas P Stafford, Vance D. Brand and Donald K. "Deke" Slayton trained powerful cameras on targets 140 miles below, gathering information that may help improve life on Earth

At the Baikonur Cosmodrome in the Soviet Union, meanwhile, cosmonauts Alexei Leonov and Valeri Kubasov rested up from their six-day voyage of space diplomacy. Their Soyuz spaceship, which spent two days linked with the Apollo in history's first international space mission, landed softly and safely in Russia on Monday

President Ford relayed his congratulations to Soviet leader Leonid I Brezhnev, saying he was confident other joint missions would follow. He also said he looks forward to the chance to personally congratulate Leonov and Kubasov.

Stafford, Slayton and Brand will return to earth on Thursday, splashing down at 4:18 p.m. CDT in the Pacific Ocean aboard their Apollo about 100 miles west of Hawaii.

On Wednesday, the astronauts plan to hold a news conference from space beginning at 7:30 a.m The cosmonauts will hold a news conference in Moscow on Thursday morning.

The astronauts announced Tuesday morning that some new passengers had joined them in space.

"As a note of extreme interest, we have five more new fish this morning," said Stafford.

The creatures are killifish, a small tropical species. Some were carried live into space and others which started the trip as eggs are now hatching. The fish are part of an experiment studying the effects of space travel on developing organisms.

"We're going to be overrun with them here by Thursday," said Stafford. "I hope they aren't sharks."

Slayton, an avid sportsman, joked about how he could angle for the small creatures.

"We've been trying to find the size hooks you'd use for those fish, but so far we haven't been able to," he said. "I've been trying to do a little improvisation up here, but I haven't had much success. The tie-down ropes are just a little bit big for fishing."

The astronauts, in space since last Tuesday, longed for the clean comforts of home.

The astronauts continued an intensive program of earth photography, taking pictures of targets in the oceans, mountains and deserts.

Scientists hope their pictures, along with photos from earlier missions, will lead to a better understanding of ocean currents, weather patterns, ice floes and location of natural resources.

Mathews Confirmed

Washington (UPI) — Dr. F. David Mathews, president of the University of Alabama, was confirmed by the Senate Tuesday to be secretary of Health, Education and Welfare

Mathews, 39, will be the youngest member of President Ford's Cabinet.

Mathews, who succeeds the retiring Caspar Weinberger, was the youngest college president when he took over at Alabama in 1969.

Hathaway Depressed

Washington (UPI) — Interior Secretary Stanley K Hathaway, hospitalized for the past week, said Tuesday he was suffering from "moderate depression."

Hathaway, a former two-term governor of Wyoming whose nomination came under heavy attack from conservation groups, issued the statement through the Interior Department.

There was no immediate indication whether Hathaway would remain in the post he took over slightly more than one month ago. The White House declined comment on the matter.

Mathews Confirmed

Washington (UPI) — Dr. F. David Mathews, president of the University of Alabama, was confirmed by the Senate Tuesday to be secretary of Health, Education and Welfare.

Mathews, 39, will be the youngest member of President Ford's Cabinet.

Mathews, who succeeds the retiring Caspar Weinberger, was the youngest college president when he took over at Alabama in 1969.

Hathaway Depressed

Washington (UPI) — Interior Secretary Stanley K. Hathaway, hospitalized for the past week, said Tuesday he was suffering from "moderate depression."

Hathaway, a former two-term governor of Wyoming whose nomination came under heavy attack from conservation groups, issued the statement through the Interior Department.

There was no immediate indication whether Hathaway would remain in the post he took over slightly more than one month ago. The White House declined comment on the matter.

Cook Firm To Sell Russia 1 Million Tons Of Wheat

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Cook Industries Inc. announced Tuesday it has agreed to sell another one million metric tons of wheat to the Soviet Union, bringing to almost 10 million metric tons the amount of grain purchased by Russia from American firms this year.

A Cook official said he believed the purchase marked the windup of 1975 Soviet grain-buying deals.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture had said it expected the Soviets to buy at least 10 million metric tons of grain from the United States and other countries to make up for bad harvests in Russia.

Government and industry spokesmen have said they do not expect the Soviet purchases to cause higher food prices in the United States because of anticipated record American harvests.

The Cook deal announced here Tuesday and confirmed by an Agriculture Department spokesman in Washington has a value of about $150 million. Another Cook sale announced last week involved two million metric tons of wheat and had a dollar value of about $300 million at current export rates.

The Soviets also have bought 1.2 million metric tons of wheat, 4.5 million metric tons of corn and 1.1 million metric tons of barley from other U.S. firms. They have purchased two million metric tons of wheat from Canada and 750,000 metric tons from Australia, for total grain purchases of about 12½ million metric tons.

The Russians bought 19 million metric tons of grain from the United States in a controversial billion-dollar deal in 1972 that tripled wheat prices and contributed to domestic food price increases.

USDA Says Dry Conditions Jeopardize Size Of Corn Crop

Washington (UPI) — Spreading dry conditions may raise new questions about the eventual size of the prospective record U.S. corn crop, an Agriculture Department report indicated Tuesday.

The Soviet Union has ordered 117 million bushels of corn plus 50.5 million bushels of barley — with an option to substitute additional corn for the barley — for delivery beginning in the fall.

Administration farm officials have stressed that livestock feed grains, plus wheat ordered by Soviet buyers last week, can easily be supplied from the 1975 grain crops, which are expected to set a record, without pinching other would-be foreign buyers or causing sharp increases in American food prices.

The Agriculture Department's weekly crop weather report did not use the word "drought," and it emphasized that development of the 1975 corn crop continued to "advance at a steady pace, still ahead of last year and the normal level in nearly all states."

However, the report said that excepting Illinois and Ohio "dry conditions were becoming more prevalent" in the Midwest states which produce the bulk of the corn crop.

"In Iowa, moisture and heat stress was causing rolling of leaves," the report said. "Soil moisture supplies were declining over much of the major corn producing areas, causing stress in several states."

The weekly report gave no estimate for the corn crop. The last official estimate, based on July 1 conditions, forecast a record 6.05 billion bushels, up 30% from last year.

The report also said:

— Moisture for corn in most of the South and East was adequate, but dry conditions were hampering the crop in parts of Arkansas, Kentucky and Tennessee.

— Harvesting of winter wheat was three-fourths complete by last Sunday and was virtually complete in Kansas, the leading wheat state. Rains delayed harvesting in eastern states, however.

— Development of the 1975 soybean crop continued to make rapid progress throughout major producing areas.

— Pastures and ranges in much of the middle of the nation north of Texas "declined rapidly" because of moisture shortages last week, but ranges in Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Oregon, Utah and Wyoming were in good to excellent condition.

Dry Weather Bites Europe's Grain

WASHINGTON (AP) — Dry weather in Europe continues to reduce 1975 grain harvest prospects, the Agriculture Department said Tuesday.

Officials said the United Kingdom's grain harvest probably will drop to 13.5 million metric tons from last year's record 16 million tons. The U.K.'s wheat crop could decline as much as 12% and force imports of more than the three million tons purchased last year.

"Sweden's grain areas also have suffered from lack of rain for a month or more," the department said in a weekly review. "June droughts are common in Sweden but spring-sown grains could be seriously affected if dry weather continues through July."

Officials said dry weather also has speeded ripening of winter grain in East Germany where the government has called for emergency harvesting to minimize losses. The report said East German barley production, which accounts for one-third of the country's total grain crop, has been particularly hard-hit.

The report noted that the Soviet Union has suffered dry weather losses and thus far, in sales reported this week, has bought 11.6 million tons of grain from foreign suppliers. That includes 8.8 million tons of wheat and feed grains from U.S. exporters; 2 million tons of wheat from Canada and 750,000 tons of wheat from Australia.

The report said rainfall in Honduras has been one-third of normal this year and could mean a substantial increase in grain import needs by that Latin American country. Honduras imported 56,000 tons of grain last year, mostly wheat.

The department said South Africa's corn crop for 1975-76 is expected to be down to 10.3 million tons, a drop of 7 per cent from last year.

Ah, The Wonders Of U.S. Business

Detroit (UPI) — There's a new development in underwear which may help to dispel domestic discord around the house.

At least that's the word from Bert Trebach, chief of marketing for a firm that has come out with deodorized underwear.

His company, Sanitized Sales Co. of America Inc., of New York, has come out with a whole line of "no-smell" underwear for men, including socks, shorts and T-shirts. At this point, there's no such line for women.

"The socks really even amaze me," Trebach said. "I know that without them whenever I took my shoes off at home, my wife would say, 'Get those socks out of the room.'"

He says wearing the deodorized socks has ended that kind of talk around his house.

The underwear, available at a Detroit-area department store chain, is treated with a secret deodorant formula during the manufacturing process.

Trebach said the deodorant continues to fight odor for up to 50 machine washings.

Trebach thinks there's a good future for the deodorized items. He said it won't be long before clothing manufacturers will come out with "no-smell" suits, dresses and hats.

85th Birthday Celebrated By Rose Kennedy

Hyannisport, Mass. (UPI) — Rose Kennedy, matriarch of one of the nation's most politically powerful families, celebrated her 85th birthday Tuesday.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., her youngest son, was to host a family birthday party Saturday.

Mrs. Kennedy began Tuesday as she always does — by attending mass at St. Francis Xavier Church — then spent a quiet day. Mrs. Eunice Kennedy Shriver and Mrs. Ethel Kennedy were reported at the family compound.

Her children included slain President John F. Kennedy, the late Sen. Robert Kennedy, D-N.Y., also assassinated, and Joseph Kennedy Jr., who died a World War II hero.

Mrs. Kennedy, the daughter of former Boston Mayor John Francis Fitzgerald, was born July 22, 1890, and later married millionaire Joseph P. Kennedy.

Famous U.S. Women Ski Team Diet

During the non-snow off season the U.S. Women's Alpine Ski Team members go on the "Ski Team" diet to lose 20 pounds in two weeks. That right — 20 pounds in 14 days! The basis of the diet is chemical food action and was devised by a famous Colorado physician especially for the U.S. Ski Team. Normal energy is maintained (very important!) while reducing. You keep "full" — no starvation — because the diet is designed that way. It's a diet that is easy to follow whether you work, travel or stay at home.

This is, honestly, a fanstastically successful diet. If it weren't, the U.S. Women's Ski Team wouldn't be permitted to use it! Right? So, give yourself the same break the U.S. Ski Team gets. Lose weight the scientific, proven way. Even if you've tried all the other diets, you owe it to yourself to try the U.S. Women's Ski Team Diet. Committee OKs $5 Million More To Inspect Grain

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Appropriations Committee approved Tuesday an additional $5 million for the Agriculture Department money bill to provide 285 more supervisors of the grain inspection program.

Grain inspectors, under investigation for more than a year for allegations of bribery and irregularities in grading and weighing shipments, are private employes of firms under contract to USDA.

Several measures are pending to convert the system to one using federal or federal-state funds for civil-service inspectors.

Agriculture Committee Chairman Herman E. Talmadge, D-Ga., and Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., the ranking minority member, asked the Appropriations Committee on Saturday to strengthen the present system by adding funds for more supervisors.

Dry Weather Bites Europe's Grain

WASHINGTON (AP) — Dry weather in Europe continues to reduce 1975 grain harvest prospects, the Agriculture Department said Tuesday.

Officials said the United Kingdom's grain harvest probably will drop to 13.5 million metric tons from last year's record 16 million tons. The U.K.'s wheat crop could decline as much as 12% and force imports of more than the three million tons purchased last year.

The department said South Africa's corn crop for 1975-76 is expected to be down to 10.3 million tons, a drop of 7 per cent from last year.

Holding CIA Accountable

The current investigations of alleged illegal CIA activities at home have uncovered the sorry truth about the death of a government scientist by his own hands in 1953.

Dr. Frank Olson was the victim of CIA experimentation with the hallucinogenic drug LSD, it was accidentally disclosed. He was given the drug without his knowledge, subsequently needed psychiatric treatment and plunged to his death from a tenth floor hotel room some weeks later. Only recently did Olson's family learn of many of the facts surrounding his death and they were understandably enraged and embittered and have threatened suit against the CIA for damages.

Now, 22 years after Olson's death, President Ford has apologized to the family on behalf of the United States government. Ford told the Olsons he would make available information on the case and said he had asked the attorney general to meet with their legal representatives to discuss claims they may make against the CIA. Ford is said to feel "very strongly" about Olson's death. The family has expressed their gratitude for Ford's interest and in a statement in added in part: "We hope that this will be part of a continuing effort to ensure that the CIA is accountable for its actions . . ."

Olson was only one of hundreds of people who took part (with and without their own knowledge) in extensive CIA and U.S. military testing of hallucinogens during the 1950s and 60s.

We suppose there can be a "national security" rationale offered for the experimenting, but the fact that the President of the United States has felt it necessary to apologize should say a whole lot about what went on.

The drugging of Americans without their knowledge to see how they react to a powerful substance of unknown properties is a monstrous thing reminiscent of the dark days of the 1930s and 40s in another part of the world.

Much of the world went to war against Hitler's Germany for such crimes.

It is little wonder that efforts are underway to discover the extent of the crimes of the intelligence community against the American people. There is nothing fuzzy-headed or unpatriotic about wanting to know what has been done to citizens of this country and to want to put an end to illegal activities. This has nothing to do with harming the legitimate security interests of the nation and those who claim that it does possibly are trying to create a smokescreen to cover up other abuses by the intelligence community.

Labor And Cheap Food

"I haven't been asked about it, and I don't know all the details, but if the union votes that way, I would support it." With that casual assertion, AFL-CIO President George Meany lent the prestige and power of his position to an expected refusal by longshoremen to load American wheat on ships destined for the Soviet Union.

With Meany's support, as uninformed as it appears to be, the longshoremen should be encouraged to go ahead with their obstructionism. Meany could help to really gum up the works.

Meany and the longshoremen are staunchly anti-communist and they want cheap food. Most Americans would be in basic agreement with those attitudes.

But will refusing to load American wheat destined for Soviet ports strike a devastating blow against world communism and help the U.S. economy? Of course not. If the longshoremen succeeded in botching up the grain sales to the Russians it probably wouldn't have much of an effect on U.S. food prices at the grocery store.

But it could have an adverse effect on the agricultural economy. American farmers need to export much of the grain that will be harvested this year in order to push prices to levels which will be above production costs. Why should American labor begrudge farmers the scandalous luxury of making ends meet?

Union labor, especially the powerful Meany, should reflect on something else: Americans might have cheaper food if it were not so expensive to produce. And one of the main reasons it is expensive to produce is that almost everything the farmer needs to produce food costs a whole lot more because of the fat contracts labor squeezes out of ownership every year.

"I don't quite see how we link up"

On Limiting Executive License

NEW YORK — Congress is to vote this week on whether to resume arms shipments to Turkey, as the Ford administration strongly wishes to do, but that is not the major issue. What is really at stake is whether Congress will stand by its determination to act as a check upon the executive branch even in the conduct of foreign affairs.

The issue arose when the Turks used American-supplied arms in their invasion of Cyprus last year. That action was in effect directed at Greece, which had inspired an attempt to overthrow the Cypriote government. Not only are Greece and Turkey both allied with the United States within the North Atlantic Treaty Alliance, but both the Foreign Military Sales Act and the Foreign Assistance Act explicitly prohibit American-supplied arms from being used in any fashion except defensively.

With an eye to what were considered American interests in the Mediterranean and within NATO, the Nixon and Ford administrations refused to enforce the law against Turkey. Congress, spurred on by Greek ethnic groups and partisans, then voted an embargo on further arms shipments to Turkey, until the Turkish government made substantial progress toward a settlement of the Cyprus affair.

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and President Ford have complained bitterly that this interferes with their ability to conduct foreign affairs, and have unceasingly demanded repeal of the embargo. In May the Senate complied, by the narrow margin of 41-40. Now the matter will be settled in the House, where Greek-American pressures can be more directly asserted. A close vote is expected, but the Ford veto will not come into play, since he has no way to veto a negative action.

The administration's case for repeal of the embargo, in addition to the contention that it improperly interferes with the conduct of foreign affairs, is that the embargo has not forced the Turks into significant concessions, while it has disrupted Turkish-American relations and caused the Turks to threaten to close valuable military and intelligence-gathering bases within Turkey. Moreover, it is asked, why did Congress enforce the law in this case but not in others?

But there is no evidence that the Turks are prepared to make significant compromises on Cyprus in any case, and it is hard to see why they might be more inclined to do so if the United States relents and gives them the arms they want, thus in effect both waiving its own laws and extending tacit approval of the invasion of Cyprus. As to Turkish threats to close American bases, Kissinger himself has frequently made clear that Washington does not intend to yield to any form of international blackmail. And to the question why the law is only now being enforced by Congress, at least two answers are possible.

'Ouch!'

One is that this is a particularly egregious offense, involving American arms in a conflict between two American allies. The other is that, in fact, most members of Congress did not even know what was in their own laws until it was called to their attention in the Turkish affair, and thus it is high time SOMEBODY enforced the law.

And while there is no question that the embargo does tie the administration's hands in a way that is awkward, and perhaps even disadvantageous, there is equally no question that where appropriations must be provided, Congress has a right to set certain terms and conditions — make policy — even in the field of foreign affairs.

However these arguments may be judged — honest persons could look at most of them in different ways — and whatever the rights and wrongs of the seemingly everlasting Greek-Turkish-Cypriote problem, the facts remain that the Turkish use of American arms in the invasion of Cyprus violated the agreement by which they obtained those arms, and that Congress deliberately chose to extend its authority far enough into the field of foreign affairs to enforce the laws in question.

If the House now goes along with the Senate in backing down from this position, neither Congress nor any administration can expect that those provisions of the law will ever bind any recipient of American arms; expedience on the Turkish question will in effect have nullified the statutes for everybody.

More important, a major piece of evidence will be provided for any president that Congress does not in fact have the will to limit his power in foreign affairs, despite its constitutional right to act in that or any field as a check upon the executive.

Already, in the Mayaguez affair, Congress has shown an indecent willingness to set the War Powers Act aside without even inquiring into possible violations — let alone into the propriety of Ford's muscle-flexing. Already, the explicit 1974 law designed to strengthen congressional oversight of covert operations by the CIA is being honored more in the breach than in fact.

Only in its refusal to throw good money after bad when the Ford administration was seeking vainly to forestall the collapse of South Vietnam and Cambodia has Congress appeared determined to limit presidential license in foreign affairs. The embargo vote offers another chance.

A Correction

Lincoln, Neb.

Maybe it was my fault for not writing too distinctly, but in my letter of July 19, regarding products available at the Saturday farmers' market, in the last sentence the word should have been "eventually" instead of "especially" about buying honey.

I have not bought any honey yet at the farmers' market because it has not been offered for sale.

Write, Shout And Scream

Lincoln, Neb.

I would like to add my words of opposition to the proposed Bicentennial sculpture on I-80. I do not like it and have not talked with anyone who does.

I read in the July 21 Star that the taxpayer will not be footing the major part of the bill. Any part is too much, as far as I am concerned. What about the so-called "in kind" services provided by the 11 communities? Is some generous lover of modern art form going to pick up the tab or will the taxpayers of each community in some way contribute?

Most of us will be living in Nebraska the rest of our lives. Let's have something pleasing to our Midwest culture. How can so few decide what will be good and acceptable for so many?

Wake up, Nebraskans! We don't have to accept the proposed design nor the fact that not one Nebraska artist was chosen. This is our state. We should have a choice. Now is the time to find out. Write! Shout! Scream! Whatever it takes to make yourselves heard!

Have Some Fun, Too

Malcolm, Neb.

To parents, coaches and sports fans of all baseball and softball leagues:

It is very disgusting to me to hear the comments and see the actions made at some of the games. How many of these people sit on their duffs and complain, but never offer to help?

If these people are asked to help, all you get is a big "No!" or a cold look. No one should have to do it all the time, when everyone has children involved.

The complaining about the umpiring is ridiculous. Most of these people are volunteers and not professionals. The umpire's call is supposed to be final!

Where is your sportsmanship? What do you expect your children to learn? You don't have to win to be happy about the game played. So, come on — let's wake up! WIN or LOSE — show some respect and sportsmanship to your fellow Americans. Play ball and have fun!

Can We Keep The Giraffe?

Lincoln, Neb.

A recent letter in this column bewailed the dearth of "decent" copy in this newspaper. The writer complained especially about an article on unwed mothers and a picture of a giraffe giving birth.

"I take the paper for something decent and interesting. Pictures such as that . . . offend decent people."

It ought to be pointed out to the writer of those lines that there are about 180,000 people in this town, none of whom would agree entirely on what is interesting. I suspect "decent" means two things in that letter. The writer is "decent" in the sense of being virtuous, upstanding, perhaps patriotic. News is "decent" if it is interesting to and does not offend such a person.

These rhetorical speculations led me to wonder if the writer of that letter cancelled her subscription to The Star during the Watergate scandal or the Vietnam war. Did it offend her sensibilities to read of the inflation-ridden upper middle class suburban family who bemoaned the fact that they might have to touch their savings to squeak by on one rather substantial monthly paycheck? Did she avert her eyes from the campaign ads during the last mayoral race?

There are those of us out here in journalism land who don't really enjoy the type of moralistic claptrap contained in that letter, but we put up with it in the interests of a free press. It's all recyclable, anyway.

So, Madam, if we promise that you can complain in print whenever you're offended, can we keep our pregnant giraffe?

ROSEMARY BERGSTROM

Editor's Note: The giraffe isn't pregnant, now.

VIRGINIA PAYETTE

Hello, Mr. Chip!

NEW YORK — There's been a lot of griping over the years about those billions we spent putting astronauts on the moon, but as far as I'm concerned, the electronic spinoffs are going to make it worth every penny.

I mean, when they come up with a checkbook that balances itself, they made a believer out of me.

This is not some space-age toy on the drawing board, kids. It's here — a checkbook with a built-in computer that gives you your current balance at the flick of a key . . . does the subtraction for you when you write a check . . . adds in your deposits . . . and shakes its finger when you're heading into bouncing-check territory.

Could you ask for more? They've got it: pocket-sized television sets, home TV with the picture measured in feet . . . a stereo system that will fit into a cigar box . . . and mini-computers that will do everything except clean the house.

According to a new magazine called Consumer Electronics Product News, the circuitry stuff that's coming out these days is literally going to change our way of life. We may be getting ready to celebrate a 200-year-old revolution, but we're living in another one: an electronic revolution.

What makes it all possible is something called a "chip," a tiny microelectronic wafer 1/6 of an inch square and not much thicker than a playing card. But what it can do when it comes to feats of memory and calculation boggles the mind.

This speck of silicone ushered in the calculator age and makes possible things right out of science fiction. And the nicest part about it all is that you don't have to be smart to enjoy them. Anybody can push a button; even me.

One of the new goodies is a central computer that will regulate fuel consumption in your furnaces and air-conditioners to minimize the effect on the environment, operate electronic cleaning gadgets and control burglar alarms.

Then there's a pocket model with a micro-radio telemetry unit that monitors your temperature, pulse and reflexes through body sensors, giving you an "instant physical" at your push-button fingertips. It can also put out coded radio signals to open doors to your house, garage or office. Reminds you of appointments, too.

And there's no longer any man who has everything — unless he's the first on the block to order up this month's product: a solar-powered calculator watch. The keyboard is in the watchband and has an eight-digit readout, four functions, chain and floating decimal.

Chips have been developed that will correct business accounts to the nearest dime . . . separate medical bills for tax purposes . . . transfer money . . . make phone calls . . . or pick up calls from your home or office.

They've even got one for the family jalopy that protects you from speeding, keeps you at a safe distance from other cars, and replaces old-fashioned speedometers, tachometers and other dials with an electronic display that warns you when the funny rattle is about to kick up.

And for the kitchen? A cooking computer that converts recipe quantities instantly from four to 30 to 200 people. Plus a calculator that takes all the brain strain out of switching over to liters and grams.

Now if they'll only come up with a chip that writes columns . . .

BOB CONSIDINE

Ham Meets Burger

NEW YORK — A curious delicacy which some of the Founding Fathers may have gingerly tasted — the hamburger — will reach an unprecedented popularity this year in the U.S., two centuries later.

We will devour about 14 billion of them. That's almost five burgers for every man, woman and child on the planet. But we who need them least will eat almost the whole output, alas.

The hamburger, which contains no ham and is hardly the normal fare of Chief Justice Burger, is a national institution we inherited from abroad, as we filched baseball from the British game of rounders, you bounders.

Seems that one Felix von Rumplemayer, who came from his native home in Germany to lend a hand to the American Revolution — he served with Gen. Frederick von Steuben — opened a butcher shop in Philadelphia after the war. Benj. Franklin was one of his friends and customers. Anyhoo, there came a big shortage of pig and cattle stomach casings in the immediate wake of independence. That meant Felix couldn't make enough sausages So he remembered that his dear old Daddy-o, when confronted by a similar crisis back in Hamburg, ground beef into patties and they sold almost as well as sausages. Felix now did the same, and in a burst of nostalgia named them after his old home town.

If any hamburgerphiles take exception to the above, please don't write or phone Henry Kissinger, another fine import from Germany. Henry has become as American as apple strudel.

We've gotten along fairly well since the first settlers arrived without having a national flower, an omission that doesn't disturb the country's sleeping habits. But it disturbs the Johnson Wax people. They're out to pin down a flower that is admired above all, from Presque Isle, Me., to San Diego, Calif., Seattle to Key West, Moose Jaw to Mobile. So far, the apple blossom is 'way out in front in the voting.

The same folks, folks, are on the lookout for the most beloved U.S. insect though, at the moment, there is no intention on their part to unseat the eagle, a vicious carrion eater the aforementioned Franklin abhored as our national bird. Benj. voted for the submissive and succulent turkey. In the search for the ultimate insect, certain states have long since jumped the gun, the spray gun one might even say. New Jersey's state bug is the ladybug, not the mosquito. How about that? Pennsylvania's honored bug is the firefly; Delaware's the honey bee. While New York ponders this weighty matter, and a few lesser problems such as bankruptcy, the children in an elementary school in Medford, Long Island, have cracked under the pressure and impulsively opted for the dragonfly.

According to the wax company's resident entomologist, whose prime interest is in killing them, there are 100,000 species of insects in the U.S. Gene Mace, whose name is like the spray the cops and certain housewives use to render people hors de combat, assures us that only 600 of the 100,000 are pests. Which is a far better record than the human populace can muster.

Would Dodge City Do?

WASHINGTON — Congress has returned to Washington again, away from the clutches of Main Street, rural star routes and mortgaged suburbs, and back in the "little red schoolhouse" of Washington Liberalism.

Legislators who for one week caught up with the viewpoints of Memphis, Omaha and Pittsburgh are back reading the Washington Post and The New York Times. Men who spent a single, short week talking to farmers, grocery-keepers and local community leaders are back rubbing shoulders with pressure groups, partying with CBS newscasters and Persian Gulf ambassadors, lunching with the Deputy Assistant Secretary of Transportation for Last Year's Bus Stops, and nibbling lobster canapes at receptions held by the Federal, State and Municipal Papershufflers Union.

This column has previously held forth on the need to shake up institutional Washington in 1976. Thomas Jefferson said we ought to have a revolution every 20 years or so, and for a century and a half we did. The great watershed triumphs of U.S. political history — Jefferson's in 1800, Jackson's in 1828, Lincoln's in 1860 and Roosevelt's in 1932 — all featured bureaucratic overhauls and rearrangements of the capital power structure. Responsiveness and creativity were renewed, so to speak.

I am afraid it won't work any more. Today's bureaucratic-media-interest group infrastructure is much too big — ten times its size in 1932 — to be reached by politics-as-usual or casual election year rhetoric.

But there may be an answer. It came on me — like a blinding revelation — in reading the other day about possible geopolitical changes within the United States (i.e., splitting Texas into five states, letting Michigan's Upper Peninsula join Wisconsin, or watching Alaska move its state capital away from Juneau). For Pete's sake, why can't we move our national capital away from Washington? After all, it was put there in the late 18th Century because the location was equi-distant between the northern coastal states and the southern coastal states. That logic no longer applies.

Other countries have done the same thing. Since the 1950's, Brazil and Pakistan, worried that national politics were yielding to the special interests of Rio de Janeiro and Karachi, have moved their governmental capitals to Brasilia and Islamabad.

☆ ☆ ☆

Suppose the United States followed suit and moved the capital from Washington to Mascoutah, Ill. (population center of the U.S.) or Hays City, Kan. (geographic center of the 48 mainland states)? First and foremost, we could offer attractive transfers only to the truly necessary 35-50% of the federal bureaucracy; the rest could be left in Washington to wither away. Second, we would have three or four years grace while the Washington interest groups, law firms and lobbies frantically relocated and rebuilt their lines of power (this alone ought to clip $10-$20 billion a year from the budget). Third, the New York-Washington media would be denied their present, pervasive day-to-day hegemony over government policy-making. And fourth, the White House, Congress and the bureaucracy would begin to operate in a regional, cultural and political climate enormously different from Washington's chic liberal cocktail party and think-tank circuit.

I suspect the costs of moving the government would be quickly recouped by increased year-to-year budgetary frugality and responsiveness to public opinion.

Doubtless this idea is abhorrent to the many hundreds of thousands of people who now enjoy Washington as one of the costliest parasitic niches in the world. And it may not be practicable for the United States to move its capital in the manner of Brazil, Pakistan or Alaska. But if not, then just what is the answer?

Holding CIA Accountable

The current investigations of alleged illegal CIA activities at home have uncovered the sorry truth about the death of a government scientist by his own hands in 1953.

Dr. Frank Olson was the victim of CIA experimentation with the hallucinogenic drug LSD, it was accidentally disclosed. He was given the drug without his knowledge, subsequently needed psychiatric treatment and plunged to his death from a tenth floor hotel room some weeks later. Only recently did Olson's family learn of many of the facts surrounding his death and they were understandably enraged and embittered and have threatened suit against the CIA for damages.

Now, 22 years after Olson's death, President Ford has apologized to the family on behalf of the United States government. Ford told the Olsons he would make available information on the case and said he had asked the attorney general to meet with their legal representatives to discuss claims they may make against the CIA. Ford is said to feel "very strongly" about Olson's death. The family has expressed their gratitude for Ford's interest and in a statement in added in part: "We hope that this will be part of a continuing effort to ensure that the CIA is accountable for its actions . . ."

Olson was only one of hundreds of people who took part (with and without their own knowledge) in extensive CIA and U.S. military testing of hallucinogens during the 1950s and 60s.

We suppose there can be a "national security" rationale offered for the experimenting, but the fact that the President of the United States has felt it necessary to apologize should say a whole lot about what went on.

The drugging of Americans without their knowledge to see how they react to a powerful substance of unknown properties is a monstrous thing reminiscent of the dark days of the 1930s and 40s in another part of the world.

Much of the world went to war against Hitler's Germany for such crimes.

It is little wonder that efforts are underway to discover the extent of the crimes of the intelligence community against the American people. There is nothing fuzzy-headed or unpatriotic about wanting to know what has been done to citizens of this country and to want to put an end to illegal activities. This has nothing to do with harming the legitimate security interests of the nation and those who claim that it does possibly are trying to create a smokescreen to cover up other abuses by the intelligence community.

Labor And Cheap Food

"I haven't been asked about it, and I don't know all the details, but if the union votes that way, I would support it." With that casual assertion, AFL-CIO President George Meany lent the prestige and power of his position to an expected refusal by longshoremen to load American wheat on ships destined for the Soviet Union.

With Meany's support, as uninformed as it appears to be, the longshoremen should be encouraged to go ahead with their obstructionism. Meany could help to really gum up the works.

Meany and the longshoremen are staunchly anti-communist and they want cheap food. Most Americans would be in basic agreement with those attitudes.

But will refusing to load American wheat destined for Soviet ports strike a devastating blow against world communism and help the U.S. economy? Of course not. If the longshoremen succeeded in botching up the grain sales to the Russians it probably wouldn't have much of an effect on U.S. food prices at the grocery store.

But it could have an adverse effect on the agricultural economy. American farmers need to export much of the grain that will be harvested this year in order to push prices to levels which will be above production costs. Why should American labor begrudge farmers the scandalous luxury of making ends meet?

Union labor, especially the powerful Meany, should reflect on something else: Americans might have cheaper food if it were not so expensive to produce. And one of the main reasons it is expensive to produce is that almost everything the farmer needs to produce food costs a whole lot more because of the fat contracts labor squeezes out of ownership every year.

Ham Meets Burger

NEW YORK — A curious delicacy which some of the Founding Fathers may have gingerly tasted — the hamburger — will reach an unprecedented popularity this year in the U.S., two centuries later.

We will devour about 14 billion of them. That's almost five burgers for every man, woman and child on the planet. But we who need them least will eat almost the whole output, alas.

The hamburger, which contains no ham and is hardly the normal fare of Chief Justice Burger, is a national institution we inherited from abroad, as we filched baseball from the British game of rounders, you bounders.

Seems that one Felix von Rumplemayer, who came from his native home in Germany to lend a hand to the American Revolution — he served with Gen. Frederick von Steuben — opened a butcher shop in Philadelphia after the war. Benj. Franklin was one of his friends and customers. Anyhoo, there came a big shortage of pig and cattle stomach casings in the immediate wake of independence. That meant Felix couldn't make enough sausages. So he remembered that his dear old Daddy-o, when confronted by a similar crisis back in Hamburg, ground beef into patties and they sold almost as well as sausages. Felix now did the same, and in a burst of nostalgia named them after his old home town.

If any hamburgerphiles take exception to the above, please don't write or phone Henry Kissinger, another fine import from Germany. Henry has become as American as apple strudel.

We've gotten along fairly well since the first settlers arrived without having a national flower, an omission that doesn't disturb the country's sleeping habits. But it disturbs the Johnson Wax people. They're out to pin down a flower that is admired above all, from Presque Isle, Me., to San Diego, Calif., Seattle to Key West, Moose Jaw to Mobile. So far, the apple blossom is 'way out in front in the voting.

Right on, Johnny Appleseed.

The same folks, folks, are on the lookout for the most beloved U.S. insect though, at the moment, there is no intention on their part to unseat the eagle, a vicious carrion eater the aforementioned Franklin abhored as our national bird. Benj. voted for the submissive and succulent turkey. In the search for the ultimate insect, certain states have long since jumped the gun, the spray gun one might even say. New Jersey's state bug is the ladybug, not the mosquito. How about that? Pennsylvania's honored bug is the firefly; Delaware's the honey bee. On Limiting Executive License

NEW YORK — Congress is to vote this week on whether to resume arms shipments to Turkey, as the Ford administration strongly wishes to do, but that is not the major issue. What is really at stake is whether Congress will stand by its determination to act as a check upon the executive branch even in the conduct of foreign affairs.

The issue arose when the Turks used American-supplied arms in their invasion of Cyprus last year. That action was in effect directed at Greece, which had inspired an attempt to overthrow the Cypriote government. Not only are Greece and Turkey both allied with the United States within the North Atlantic Treaty Alliance, but both the Foreign Military Sales Act and the Foreign Assistance Act explicitly prohibit American-supplied arms from being used in any fashion except defensively.

With an eye to what were considered American interests in the Mediterranean and within NATO, the Nixon and Ford administrations refused to enforce the law against Turkey. Congress, spurred on by Greek ethnic groups and partisans, then voted an embargo on further arms shipments to Turkey, until the Turkish government made substantial progress toward a settlement of the Cyprus affair.

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and President Ford have complained bitterly that this interferes with their ability to conduct foreign affairs, and have unceasingly demanded repeal of the embargo. In May the Senate complied, by the narrow margin of 41-40. Now the matter will be settled in the House, where Greek-American pressures can be more directly asserted. A close vote is expected, but the Ford veto will not come into play, since he has no way to veto a negative action.

The administration's case for repeal of the embargo, in addition to the contention that it improperly interferes with the conduct of foreign affairs, is that the embargo has not forced the Turks into significant concessions, while it has disrupted Turkish-American relations and caused the Turks to threaten to close valuable military and intelligence-gathering bases within Turkey. Moreover, it is asked, why did Congress enforce the law in this case but not in others?

But there is no evidence that the Turks are prepared to make significant compromises on Cyprus in any case, and it is hard to see why they might be more inclined to do so if the United States relents and gives them the arms they want, thus in effect both waiving its own laws and extending tacit approval of the invasion of Cyprus. As to Turkish threats to close American bases, Kissinger himself has frequently made clear that Washington does not intend to yield to any form of international blackmail. And to the question why the law is only now being enforced by Congress, at least two answers are possible.

'Ouch!'

One is that this is a particularly egregious offense, involving American arms in a conflict between two American allies. The other is that, in fact, most members of Congress did not even know what was in their own laws until it was called to their attention in the Turkish affair, and thus it is high time SOMEBODY enforced the law.

And while there is no question that the embargo does tie the administration's hands in a way that is awkward, and perhaps even disadvantageous, there is equally no question that where appropriations must be provided, Congress has a right to set certain terms and conditions — make policy — even in the field of foreign affairs.

However these arguments may be judged — honest persons could look at most of them in different ways — and whatever the rights and wrongs of the seemingly everlasting Greek-Turkish-Cypriote problem, the facts remain that the Turkish use of American arms in the invasion of Cyprus violated the agreement by which they obtained those arms, and that Congress deliberately chose to extend its authority far enough into the field of foreign affairs to enforce the laws in question.

If the House now goes along with the Senate in backing down from this position, neither Congress nor any administration can expect that those provisions of the law will ever bind any recipient of American arms; expedience on the Turkish question will in effect have nullified the statutes for everybody.

More important, a major piece of evidence will be provided for any president that Congress does not in fact have the will to limit his power in foreign affairs, despite its constitutional right to act in that or any field as a check upon the executive.

Already, in the Mayaguez affair, Congress has shown an indecent willingness to set the War Powers Act aside without even inquiring into possible violations — let alone into the propriety of Ford's muscle-flexing. Already, the explicit 1974 law designed to strengthen congressional oversight of covert operations by the CIA is being honored more in the breach than in fact.

Only in its refusal to throw good money after bad when the Ford administration was seeking vainly to forestall the collapse of South Vietnam and Cambodia has Congress appeared determined to limit presidential license in foreign affairs. The embargo vote offers another chance.

A Correction

Lincoln, Neb.

Maybe it was my fault for not writing too distinctly, but in my letter of July 19, regarding products available at the Saturday farmers' market, in the last sentence the word should have been "eventually" instead of "especially" about buying honey.

I have not bought any honey yet at the farmers' market because it has not been offered for sale.

Write, Shout And Scream

Lincoln, Neb.

I would like to add my words of opposition to the proposed Bicentennial sculpture on I-80. I do not like it and have not talked with anyone who does.

I read in the July 21 Star that the taxpayer will not be footing the major part of the bill. Any part is too much, as far as I am concerned. What about the so-called "in kind" services provided by the 11 communities? Is some generous lover of modern art form going to pick up the tab or will the taxpayers of each community in some way contribute?

Most of us will be living in Nebraska the rest of our lives. Let's have something pleasing to our Midwest culture. How can so few decide what will be good and acceptable for so many?

Wake up, Nebraskans! We don't have to accept the proposed design nor the fact that not one Nebraska artist was chosen. This is our state. We should have a choice. Now is the time to find out. Write! Shout! Scream! Whatever it takes to make yourselves heard!

Have Some Fun, Too

Malcolm, Neb.

To parents, coaches and sports fans of all baseball and softball leagues:

It is very disgusting to me to hear the comments and see the actions made at some of the games. How many of these people sit on their duffs and complain, but never offer to help?

If these people are asked to help, all you get is a big "No!" or a cold look. No one should have to do it all the time, when everyone has children involved.

The complaining about the umpiring is ridiculous. Most of these people are volunteers and not professionals. The umpire's call is supposed to be final!

Where is your sportsmanship? What do you expect your children to learn? You don't have to win to be happy about the game played. So, come on — let's wake up! WIN or LOSE — show some respect and sportsmanship to your fellow Americans. Play ball and have fun!

Can We Keep The Giraffe?

Lincoln, Neb.

A recent letter in this column bewailed the dearth of "decent" copy in this newspaper. The writer complained especially about an article on unwed mothers and a picture of a giraffe giving birth.

"I take the paper for something decent and interesting. Pictures such as that . . . offend decent people."

It ought to be pointed out to the writer of those lines that there are about 180,000 people in this town, none of whom would agree entirely on what is interesting. I suspect "decent" means two things in that letter. The writer is "decent" in the sense of being virtuous, upstanding, perhaps patriotic. News is "decent" if it is interesting to and does not offend such a person.

These rhetorical speculations led me to wonder if the writer of that letter cancelled her subscription to The Star during the Watergate scandal or the Vietnam war. Did it offend her sensibilities to read of the inflation-ridden upper middle class suburban family who bemoaned the fact that they might have to touch their savings to squeak by on one rather substantial monthly paycheck? Did she avert her eyes from the campaign ads during the last mayoral race?

There are those of us out here in journalism land who don't really enjoy the type of moralistic claptrap contained in that letter, but we put up with it in the interests of a free press. It's all recyclable, anyway.

So, Madam, if we promise that you can complain in print whenever you're offended, can we keep our pregnant giraffe?

Hello, Mr. Chip!

NEW YORK — There's been a lot of griping over the years about those billions we spent putting astronauts on the moon, but as far as I'm concerned, the electronic spinoffs are going to make it worth every penny.

I mean, when they come up with a checkbook that balances itself, they made a believer out of me.

This is not some space-age toy on the drawing board, kids. It's here — a checkbook with a built-in computer that gives you your current balance at the flick of a key . . . does the subtraction for you when you write a check . . . adds in your deposits . . . and shakes its finger when you're heading into bouncing-check territory.

Could you ask for more? They've got it: pocket-sized television sets, home TV with the picture measured in feet . . . a stereo system that will fit into a cigar box . . . and mini-computers that will do everything except clean the house.

According to a new magazine called Consumer Electronics Product News, the circuitry stuff that's coming out these days is literally going to change our way of life. We may be getting ready to celebrate a 200-year-old revolution, but we're living in another one: an electronic revolution.

What makes it all possible is something called a "chip," a tiny microelectronic wafer 1/6 of an inch square and not much thicker than a playing card. But what it can do when it comes to feats of memory and calculation boggles the mind.

This speck of silicone ushered in the calculator age and makes possible things right out of science fiction. And the nicest part about it all is that you don't have to be smart to enjoy them. Anybody can push a button; even me.

One of the new goodies is a central computer that will regulate fuel consumption in your furnaces and air-conditioners to minimize the effect on the environment, operate electronic cleaning gadgets and control burglar alarms.

Then there's a pocket model with a micro-radio telemetry unit that monitors your temperature, pulse and reflexes through body sensors, giving you an "instant physical" at your push-button fingertips. It can also put out coded radio signals to open doors to your house, garage or office. Reminds you of appointments, too.

And there's no longer any man who has everything — unless he's the first on the block to order up this month's product: a solar-powered calculator watch. The keyboard is in the watchband and has an eight-digit readout, four functions, chain and floating decimal.

Chips have been developed that will correct business accounts to the nearest dime . . . separate medical bills for tax purposes . . . transfer money . . . make phone calls . . . or pick up calls from your home or office.

They've even got one for the family jalopy that protects you from speeding, keeps you at a safe distance from other cars, and replaces old-fashioned speedometers, tachometers and other dials with an electronic display that warns you when the funny rattle is about to kick up.

And for the kitchen? A cooking computer that converts recipe quantities instantly from four to 30 to 200 people. Plus a calculator that takes all the brain strain out of switching over to liters and grams.

Now if they'll only come up with a chip that writes columns . . .

POSTCARD by Stan Delaplane

Glastonbury — King Arthur went to his reward remarking:

"But now farewell. I am going a long way . . .

". . . to the island valley of Avilion."

So the other day I drove down from the moors of Devon to the stormy coast of Bristol Channel. Where Arthur lies buried at Glastonbury, the ancient Avilion.

☆ ☆ ☆

As every schoolboy knows, King Arthur sent his Knights of the Round Table, scouring around Britain. Knocking each other off horses. Splitting each other's skulls with swords and rescuing fair maidens.

It all seemed logical when I was a boy reading about Knights.

A knight would meet another knight and say: "How about a joust, fair knight?"

The other knight would then pull down his face guard. They charged each other. The one knocked off his horse lost.

☆ ☆ ☆

The one unhorsed was then ordered to go to King Arthur and be his liege.

A liege, I guess, is kind of like a press agent. He had to take a lot of guff from the king and other knights. Until he could knock another knight off his horse.

Then that knight had to be a liege. It was apparently a lousy job. And everybody tried to make the other knight do the liege work.

☆ ☆ ☆

It was a bitter day. A wind like ice blew off the Channel and through the majestic stone ruins of the old abbey.

The abbey, they say, was founded by Joseph of Arimathea. He came with 12 disciples in A.D. 60 to preach the gospel. The British chief Arviragus gave them land in the marsh.

They built a modest church of wattles — always referred to in ancient books as "the old church."

The abbey built and built — the most holy place in Britain — surviving Saxon and Dane and Norman invasins.

The legend is that Joseph brought one of the Thorns from the cross with him. And the Holy Grail from which Christ drank.

☆ ☆ ☆

The ruins today are impressive. When the great abbeys and their orders were dissolved in 1539, it was abandoned. And like all the rest, Glastonbury became a convenient cut stone quarry for local builders.

If you were building a house, it was much easier to go over and pull out some cut stone from an abbey than hire a stone cutter.

Even so, much remains. The burial place of Arthur is well-marked. And recent excavations show where Edward I pulled him out of his original tomb.

The wind blew through the gray ruins, edged like Arthur's famed Excalibur. Or a Wilkinson's Sword Blade, anyway. You could have shaved with it.

How the monks stood it all those chilly years is an icy wonder.

Anyway, around in the late 1200s, there was great interest in King Arthur. And Edward I and Queen Eleanor came down to Glastonbury. They went into the tombs and got out King Arthur and Queen Guinevere. And they re-established them in a place of honor in the main church.

Historians have down-graded Arthur and his knights. They say he was probably a British general. Hired by the Romans to hold the frontier of Wales against the warring border tribes.

But as all of us ex-schoolboys know, this is blooming nonsense.

Arthur was a king. With Lancelot and Galahad and Gawaine and all those fine knights around him.

Adjustment Board Law Thought Unconstitutional

Grand Island (UPI) — Sam Grimminger, Hall County attorney, told the board of supervisors Tuesday he thinks a new state law mandating formation of a county board of adjustment is unconstitutional.

Grimminger told the Hall County board he feels the law represents "unreasonable interference with the right of elected county officials to enforce zoning regulations.'

According to Grimminger, the law sets up a board appointed by the supervisors which has the right to hear zoning appeals, overrule county board zoning decisions and make its own decisions.

Giving such a body those powers, the attorney said, constitutes an unreasonable delegation of legislative and judicial power to a non-elected board.

Grimminger told the supervisors they could continue under the present setup of handling appeals and if the county is challenged in court he feels they would have a good case and the law would be thrown out.

The regional planning commission has already recommended changes in the county zoning ordinance to reflect the new board. Those recommendations as well as Grimminger's opinion will come up for discussion and action July 29 during a public hearing.

POSTCARD by Stan Delaplane

Glastonbury — King Arthur went to his reward remarking:

"But now farewell. I am going a long way . . .

". . . to the island valley of Avilion."

So the other day I drove down from the moors of Devon to the stormy coast of Bristol Channel. Where Arthur lies buried at Glastonbury, the ancient Avilion.

☆ ☆ ☆

As every schoolboy knows, King Arthur sent his Knights of the Round Table, scouring around Britain. Knocking each other off horses. Splitting each other's skulls with swords and rescuing fair maidens.

It all seemed logical when I was a boy reading about Knights.

A knight would meet another knight and say: "How about a joust, fair knight?"

The other knight would then pull down his face guard. They charged each other. The one knocked off his horse lost.

☆ ☆ ☆

The one unhorsed was then ordered to go to King Arthur and be his liege.

A liege, I guess, is kind of like a press agent. He had to take a lot of guff from the king and other knights. Until he could knock another knight off his horse.

Then that knight had to be a liege. It was apparently a lousy job. And everybody tried to make the other knight do the liege work.

☆ ☆ ☆

It was a bitter day. A wind like ice blew off the Channel and through the majestic stone ruins of the old abbey.

The abbey, they say, was founded by Joseph of Arimathea. He came with 12 disciples in A.D. 60 to preach the gospel. The British chief Arviragus gave them land in the marsh.

They built a modest church of wattles — always referred to in ancient books as "the old church."

The abbey built and built — the most holy place in Britain — surviving Saxon and Dane and Norman invasins.

The legend is that Joseph brought one of the Thorns from the cross with him. And the Holy Grail from which Christ drank.

☆ ☆ ☆

The ruins today are impressive. When the great abbeys and their orders were dissolved in 1539, it was abandoned. And like all the rest, Glastonbury became a convenient cut stone quarry for local builders.

If you were building a house, it was much easier to go over and pull out some cut stone from an abbey than hire a stone cutter.

Even so, much remains. The burial place of Arthur is well-marked. And recent excavations show where Edward I pulled him out of his original tomb.

The wind blew through the gray ruins, edged like Arthur's famed Excalibur. Or a Wilkinson's Sword Blade, anyway. You could have shaved with it.

How the monks stood it all those chilly years is an icy wonder.

Anyway, around in the late 1200s, there was great interest in King Arthur. And Edward I and Queen Eleanor came down to Glastonbury. They went into the tombs and got out King Arthur and Queen Guinevere. And they re-established them in a place of honor in the main church.

Historians have down-graded Arthur and his knights. They say he was probably a British general. Hired by the Romans to hold the frontier of Wales against the warring border tribes.

But as all of us ex-schoolboys know, this is blooming nonsense.

Arthur was a king. With Lancelot and Galahad and Gawaine and all those fine knights around him.

Adjustment Board Law Thought Unconstitutional

Grand Island (UPI) — Sam Grimminger, Hall County attorney, told the board of supervisors Tuesday he thinks a new state law mandating formation of a county board of adjustment is unconstitutional.

Grimminger told the Hall County board he feels the law represents "unreasonable interference with the right of elected county officials to enforce zoning regulations.'

According to Grimminger, the law sets up a board appointed by the supervisors which has the right to hear zoning appeals, overrule county board zoning decisions and make its own decisions.

Giving such a body those powers, the attorney said, constitutes an unreasonable delegation of legislative and judicial power to a non-elected board.

Grimminger told the supervisors they could continue under the present setup of handling appeals and if the county is challenged in court he feels they would have a good case and the law would be thrown out.

The regional planning commission has already recommended changes in the county zoning ordinance to reflect the new board. Those recommendations as well as Grimminger's opinion will come up for discussion and action July 29 during a public hearing.

Sunflower Speculation Hikes Soybean Prices

Speculation that Russia's sunflower seed crop was damaged by adverse weather contributed to a 40 cent per bushel hike in Nebraska soybean prices the first two weeks in July, University of Nebraska Extension economist Everett Peterson reports.

Other factors behind the increase, he said, include reduced domestic soybean oil inventories, flood damage to portions of the Eastern European sunflower crop and uncertainty about the potential size of the U.S. soybean crop.

Peterson cited a mid-July U.S. Department of Agriculture report that indicated portions of the Russian grain and sunflower area received needed rains in early July.

USDA also projects the 1975 Soviet sunflower seed crop yield to be about the same as last year, when yields were below normal. Exact estimates of flood damage to the Eastern European crops are not yet available, Peterson said.

Through mid-July, he said, the Russians had shown no definite interest in buying U.S. soybeans.

Soybean use has dropped 19% below a year earlier this season, due to heavy competition from palm oil, fishmeal, Brazilian soybeans, a worldwide inventory increase of soybeans, soybean products and some competing oilseed products.

Trade reports indicate that Soviet sunflower seed oil also has provided modest competition this season with soybean oil for the first time in several years. This reduced demand and increased competition has pushed the 1975 soybean carryover stocks moderately above 1974 levels, he said.

5 Nebraskans Honored For SPF Swine Activities

Four state awards and one national award were presented to Nebraskans here Tuesday during the George A. Young conference on advances in swine repopulation.

Held in conjunction with the conference were the annual meetings of both the Nebraska and the national SPF swine accrediting agencies. SPF is a program, now organized in 21 states, for raising swine that are free of certain diseases.

Honored by the national agency for leadership and promotion of SPF swine was Dr. Marvin Twiehaus, chairman of the University of Nebraska-Lincoln veterinary science department. Twiehaus is past chairman of the national SPF advisory committee and has been involved with SPF since he joined the NU staff in 1963.

The Nebraska SPF Agency presented two service awards to veterinary science professor Dr. E. L. Stair and SPF fieldman and assistant secretary-manager Ken Olson. Two outstanding producer awards went to Stan Schelkopf of Shickley and Gerald Royal of Palmyra.

Stair was a member of the NU staff until July 1 when he joined the Oklahoma State University staff as assistant director and chief pathologist of their animal disease diagnostic laboratory.

Meanwhile, Nebraska SPF secretary-manager Tom Socha reported the number of pigs born on Nebraska SPF farms in 1974 hit a record high of 41,415, following a steady pattern of increase since the program began in 1958.

With 60 herds enrolled, Nebraska is the largest state SPF organization among the 21 states that have established programs.

Couple Files Lawsuit Against Auto Dealer

Herbert Friedman and his wife Brenda want everyone who has purchased a new Mercedes Benz from Vanice-Cadillac and Pontiac for the past five years to get $100.

That's the amount the buyers should be awarded for purchasing cars with clocks "which were defective from the outset, do not keep time and are not fit for their intended purpose," the Friedmans claimed in a suit filed in Lancaster District Court.

The couple is also seeking $12,500 to recoup the $7,500 purchase price of their Mercedes Benz 280 SE, $2,000 in repairs and $3,000 for lost use of the car for 12 weeks at $50 per day.

"Said vehicle from the outset was a 'lemon,' " the suit contends. The suit claims the car leaks oil, that the fuel pump went out at 14,000 miles, that the transmission went out at 20,000, that the radio and electric clock didn't work, that it had a cracked head and that the tires wore out after 11,000 miles.

Kaer Vanice of Vanice Pontiac-Cadillac said that he had not seen the suit and declined to comment.

7th Step Contract Okayed By Douglas County Board

Omaha (UPI) — The Douglas County Board Tuesday approved an estimated $60,000 contract with Omaha's 7th Step Foundation over the objections of county Corrections Director Charles Terry, who said there was "chaos" within the foundations' administrative structure.

Commissioner Mike Albert called Terry's presentation a "stage show" and "one of the most ridiculous things I've ever seen."

Albert commented in reference to a contract provision which he said indicated Terry wanted to have considerable voice in 7th Step hiring practices.

"The county should not, under any circumstances, dictate who should be hired under a program," Albert said. "The morality of this astounds me."

Terry has sought the removal, but not the firing, of the foundation's executive director, John Sevrean, and economic development coordinator James Baird, who has resigned to accept a similar post with 7th Step of Iowa.

Although Baird and Sevrean were among those who opposed Terry's appointment as corrections director, Terry told the board Tuesday "there are no personality conflicts in this contract whatsoever."

Terry further disputed a statement by Albert that the corrections director told the county Citizens Correctional Advisory Committee meeting Thursday night to come to the Tuesday board meeting to see the "fireworks" on 7th Step.

Albert said some 28 persons who attended the meeting apparently heard Terry make the statement, and Terry told Albert "all 28 are lying."

Apache Corp. Reports Increase In Second Quarter Earnings

Apache Corp. has reported a significant improvement in second quarter earnings over a depressed first quarter, resulting from increased oil-related operations.

National Crane Corp. of Waverly, which employes 263 people, is a subsidiary of Apache Corp. The company manufactures and markets truck mounted cranes.

All financial data for both 1974 and 1975 segregates the results of the firm's metals supply operation, which will be discontinued Aug. 1.

Earnings per share from continuing operations were 50¢ as compared to 61¢ per share for last year's second quarter.

Net income from continuing operations was $2,175,000 compared to $2,237,000 in the second quarter of 1974.

Budget Agency Suggests End Of Mid-State Project

WASHINGTON (AP) — An Interior Department budget agency has recommended that the Nebraska Mid-State division irrigation project be canceled.

The chairman of a House conservation subcommittee has suggested that Interior Secretary Stanley K. Hathaway give the proposal "immediate consideration."

The recommendation was made by the Office of Program Development and Budget after it completed a study of the project requested by the under secretary of the Interior.

In a memorandum on the subject, the budget office concluded that private irrigation projects in the Platte River area have reduced the need for a federal program and limited the number of farmers willing to participate.

The federal project would require a minimum of 140,000 irrigation acres, but the study said farmers had committed only about 100,000 irrigable acres.

Rep. William S. Moorhead, D-Pa., chairman of the House subcommittee on conservation, energy and natural resources, stopped short of endorsing the budget office findsings. But he wrote Hathaway that he found the memorandum "most convincing." He urged the secretary to notify his subcommittee, the House and Senate Appropriations committees and other appropriate committees of his decision on the project as soon as possible. The House approved an expenditure of $600,000 for the project in fiscal 1976 public works legislation it passed recently. The bill isnow under study by the Senate Appropriations Committee.

The Fish and Wildlife Service is considering the establishment of a 15,000 acre wildlife refugee in the Platte River area. The study says the irrigation project could interfere with the refuge if it is estalished.

The study listed three options in handling the irrigation project — continuing advanced planning for the authorized program, or reformulating the proposal and going ahead with a smaller, more economically feasible plan or deauthorizing the proposal.

The budget office recommended deauthorization "because of the speculative nature of future climatic conditions and the relatively low amount of irrigable lands possibly requiring full water service."

Ex-Schools Owner Told To Refund $750,000

Omaha (AP)—Lear Siegler, Inc., which once operated 19 vocational schools in Nebraska and other states, has been ordered by the Federal Trade Commission to refund $750,000 to students who took computer courses at those schools.

The FTC said Tuesday the company used unfair and deceptive methods to attract students.

Lear Siegler owned the Lincoln School of Commerce and the Nettleton Business College in Omaha, according to a spokesman for the current owner, Intellect, Inc. Intellect purchased the schools in late 1973, the spokesman said.

Also included in the Lear Siegler organization was the Nettleton Business Training College, Sioux City, Iowa.

The FTC has alleged that Lear Siegler had represented its commissioned California-based salesmen as trained vocational counselors, falsely offered free job placement, promised high-paying jobs after graduation and kept tuition money paid by students who took jobs offering free training.

The FTC has ordered the company to tell future students the job placement rate, dropout rate and salaries received by graduates; give enrollees 10 days to change their minds and document any claims of job opportunities.

The restitution order directs the firm to mail letters and questionnaires to all former computer students who were enrolled up to Dec. 31, 1973, if their tuition was not paid by the government and they did not get the job for which they had been trained.

Affected students who have not received a restitution questionnaire were advised to contact the Federal Trade Commission, Room 282, Washington, D. C., 20580.

Nine Doctors' Licenses Lost In Past Five Years

Three Nebraska doctors have had their licenses revoked and six have either surrendered them or had them suspended during the past five years, according to a State Health Department report.

The nine are among 29 doctors investigated during that period by the department and its Board of Examiners in Medicine and Surgery, both of whom supervise medical competence in the state.

Studies of the 29 revealed cases ranging from habitual alcoholism and drug addiction to supplying false information when applying for license.

A breakdown of the 29 cases by board director Rex Higley shows the following action taken: revocation of license, 3; suspension or voluntary license surrender, 6; reprimands or probation, 3; placed on limited practice license, 2; practicing without license, 1; insufficient application evidence, 3;

Left state before license action completed, 3; denial of application when other state license lost as result of Nebraska investigation, insufficient data provided, 4; cases pending, 4.

Higley and department director Henry Smith said such action usually is not publicized since most doctors involved often can straighten out their problems if they aren't publicized.

Storm Damage Said Serious At Three Sites

Lightning from the thunderstorm Tuesday morning struck three buildings in Lancaster County, causing considerable damage to each structure. No injuries were reported, however.

Lightning struck the Cornhusker Apartments, 13th and L, knocking an 18-inch hole in the roof and shaking loose plaster from the fifth floor ceiling. No damage was done by fire or smoke.

Lightning hit a barn belonging to Lawrence Conway, located four miles south of the Crete Corner. The barn was burned to the ground before firemen were able to extinguish the blaze.

A shaft of lightning from the storm also struck the home of Donald L. Magee one mile east of Cheney. The fire damaged the roof, attic and ceiling of the house, before it was put out.

Lincoln Police Arrest Suspect In K.C. Murder

Lincoln police have arrested a 23-year-old man wanted for murder in Kansas City. He was turned over to Kansas City authorities Tuesday afternoon.

Arrested was Herbert D. Burnfin, of Kansas City. Burnfin was apprehended in a cafe at 7th and P at 1:30 a.m. Monday. He was in town for a preliminary hearing for a burglary at a Lincoln gunstore last year, and was scheduled for trial on the burglary charge in the fall.

Fire Damages Mobile Home

Fire and smoke almost completely destroyed the mobile home of Gladys Yates, 74, of 3720 Adams, Tuesday morning.

Mrs. Yates said she was awakened by the noises in the living room of her mobile home. The noises turned out to be a fire.

Fire officials reported that the fire destroyed the living room and the kitchen, and smoke caused considerable damage. Cause of the fire has not been determined.

First Aid Given Fireman

Des Moines fireman Thomas Anderson, on the ground, is given first aid by fireman Robert Brown, kneeling. Anderson was overcome by smoke while fighting a fire at the garage of Mr. and Mrs. Curtis Wright on Des Moines' east side. Two other firemen were also overcome momentarily.

Lincoln Ed Board Asks Funds For 2 'Positive Peer' Projects

By DICK HOLMAN
Star Staff Writer

Kids know they can con adults, but they can't con other kids, says Ron Brandt, associate superintendent for instruction in the Lincoln Public Schools.

And because kids have a powerful influence on each other, Whittier and Everett Junior High Schools may use that peer pressure to help kids improve themselves and their self-image, beginning this fall.

It all depends on the Nebraska Crime Commission, which will be asked Friday to approve $83,454 in federal funds for the "Positive Peer Dynamics" project.

The Lincoln Board of Education Tuesday night approved a $4.636 (or 5%) share in the $92,727 project, to match 5% in state funds.

If approved, the Whittier program will be led by full-time staff members of Positive Peer Culture Co., who will move to Lincoln for the duration. At Everett, teachers will be trained to operate the program by Social Systems Co. staffers.

Project Aims

The programs attempt to develop positive attitudes among students, using methods such as identifying and training student leaders and forming "help groups."

The two junior highs were selected after data showed students there had "especially high" police and juvenile court contacts, compared to other schools.

But Everett and Whittier aren't tagged problem schools, Supt. John Prasch said, noting problems occur systemwide. His goal, he said, is "to learn how to apply it (Positive Peer Dynamics) generally" to improve school climates.

In an Omaha junior high and at the Kearney state boys school, similar projects helped bring about such positive changes as reduced vandalism, drug use and interracial fighting, Brandt said.

The school board also approved a $14,747 personal-social growth project, "a positive approach to drug abuse," at Lakeview Elementary School, and another $8,000 to train four East High School counselors to deal with troubled youngsters, then set up a program to help them.

Funds Denied

Prasch reported that a request for federal funds to run the Park Elementary bilingual program has been denied, "distressing news to us because we were well pleased with our results."

However, the bilingual project will be continued, he said, and restructured from "funds we can scrounge together." Federal money for a cultural awareness project was also denied, but plans for it are full steam ahead.

The board authorized a $366,584 request for federal Title I funds to operate programs for disadvantaged children. During 1974-75, 2,377 students were identified eligible to get Title I assistance.

Evaluator Carl (Nick) Novak said most Title I programs last year focused on reading, and achievement among students in 20 schools "was equal to or surpassed" that in the past two to three years. The new decentralized arrangement also enabled the district to serve more Title I students he said.

Junior high teachers still believe students need to improve their reading, Novak said, but he added that tests show they have the basic skills and just cannot perform "that total act we call reading."

A total of 1,196 students participated in Title I reading programs, and 268 in math programs.

Only Two Dropouts

Ed Schwartzkopf, career development superviser, reported that only two of 443 students enrolled in the Job Experience Training (JET) program dropped out of school last year.

At 0.5%, that contrasts favorably with the 5% dropout rate for the entire student body, he said.

JET, a federally sponsored program for low-income, disadvantaged students, encourages the 14- to 21-year-olds to remain in school, and get a diploma and job skill.

Of the 443 students served, seven in ten were white, two black, and the remainder Indian and Spanish-American. They worked in 444 different jobs for a total of 57,720 hours.

"We get great cooperation in placing these youngsters" in non-profit organizations, Schwartzkopf said, and many of the agencies eventually hire the students full-time.

JET operates three programs, for in-school and out-of-school students, and a summer program, paid by more than $600,000 in Comprehensive Employment Training Act funds. Only 10% is spent on administration, Schwartzkopf said, pleased that 90 cents of every dollar serves the students.

The board also accepted a $300 donation from the Lakeview School parent organization, to buy playground equipment.

Budget Agency Suggests End Of Mid-State Project

WASHINGTON (AP) — An Interior Department budget agency has recommended that the Nebraska Mid-State division irrigation project be canceled.

The chairman of a House conservation subcommittee has suggested that Interior Secretary Stanley K. Hathaway give the proposal "immediate consideration."

The recommendation was made by the Office of Program Development and Budget after it completed a study of the project requested by the under secretary of the Interior.

In a memorandum on the subject, the budget office concluded that private irrigation projects in the Platte River area have reduced the need for a federal program and limited the number of farmers willing to participate.

The federal project would require a minimum of 140,000 irrigation acres, but the study said farmers had committed only about 100,000 irrigable acres.

Rep. William S. Moorhead, D-Pa., chairman of the House subcommittee on conservation, energy and natural resources, stopped short of endorsing the budget office findsings. But he wrote Hathaway that he found the memorandum "most convincing." He urged the secretary to notify his subcommittee, the House and Senate Appropriations committees and other appropriate committees of his decision on the project as soon as possible. The House approved an expenditure of $600,000 for the project in fiscal 1976 public works legislation it passed recently. The bill isnow under study by the Senate Appropriations Committee.

The Fish and Wildlife Service is considering the establishment of a 15,000 acre wildlife refugee in the Platte River area. The study says the irrigation project could interfere with the refuge if it is estalished.

The study listed three options in handling the irrigation project — continuing advanced planning for the authorized program, or reformulating the proposal and going ahead with a smaller, more economically feasible plan or deauthorizing the proposal.

The budget office recommended deauthorization "because of the speculative nature of future climatic conditions and the relatively low amount of irrigable lands possibly requiring full water service."

Storm Damage Said Serious At Three Sites

Lightning from the thunderstorm Tuesday morning struck three buildings in Lancaster County, causing considerable damage to each structure. No injuries were reported, however.

Lightning struck the Cornhusker Apartments, 13th and L, knocking an 18-inch hole in the roof and shaking loose plaster from the fifth floor ceiling. No damage was done by fire or smoke.

Lightning hit a barn belonging to Lawrence Conway, located four miles south of the Crete Corner. The barn was burned to the ground before firemen were able to extinguish the blaze.

A shaft of lightning from the storm also struck the home of Donald L. Magee one mile east of Cheney. The fire damaged the roof, attic and ceiling of the house, before it was put out.

Lincoln Police Arrest Suspect In K.C. Murder

Lincoln police have arrested a 23-year-old man wanted for murder in Kansas City. He was turned over to Kansas City authorities Tuesday afternoon.

Arrested was Herbert D. Burnfin, of Kansas City. Burnfin was apprehended in a cafe at 7th and P at 1:30 a.m. Monday. He was in town for a preliminary hearing for a burglary at a Lincoln gunstore last year, and was scheduled for trial on the burglary charge in the fall.

Fire Damages Mobile Home

Fire and smoke almost completely destroyed the mobile home of Gladys Yates, 74, of 3720 Adams, Tuesday morning.

Mrs. Yates said she was awakened by the noises in the living room of her mobile home. The noises turned out to be a fire.

Fire officials reported that the fire destroyed the living room and the kitchen, and smoke caused considerable damage. Cause of the fire has not been determined.

Ex-Schools Owner Told To Refund $750,000

Omaha (AP)—Lear Siegler, Inc., which once operated 19 vocational schools in Nebraska and other states, has been ordered by the Federal Trade Commission to refund $750,000 to students who took computer courses at those schools.

The FTC said Tuesday the company used unfair and deceptive methods to attract students.

Lear Siegler owned the Lincoln School of Commerce and the Nettleton Business College in Omaha, according to a spokesman for the current owner, Intellect, Inc. Intellect purchased the schools in late 1973, the spokesman said.

Also included in the Lear Siegler organization was the Nettleton Business Training College, Sioux City, Iowa.

The FTC has alleged that Lear Siegler had represented its commissioned California-based salesmen as trained vocational counselors, falsely offered free job placement, promised high-paying jobs after graduation and kept tuition money paid by students who took jobs offering free training.

The FTC has ordered the company to tell future students the job placement rate, dropout rate and salaries received by graduates; give enrollees 10 days to change their minds and document any claims of job opportunities.

The restitution order directs the firm to mail letters and questionnaires to all former computer students who were enrolled up to Dec. 31, 1973, if their tuition was not paid by the government and they did not get the job for which they had been trained.

Affected students who have not received a restitution questionnaire were advised to contact the Federal Trade Commission, Room 282, Washington, D. C., 20580.

Nine Doctors' Licenses Lost In Past Five Years

Three Nebraska doctors have had their licenses revoked and six have either surrendered them or had them suspended during the past five years, according to a State Health Department report.

The nine are among 29 doctors investigated during that period by the department and its Board of Examiners in Medicine and Surgery, both of whom supervise medical competence in the state.

Studies of the 29 revealed cases ranging from habitual alcoholism and drug addiction to supplying false information when applying for license.

A breakdown of the 29 cases by board director Rex Higley shows the following action taken: revocation of license, 3; suspension or voluntary license surrender, 6; reprimands or probation, 3; placed on limited practice license, 2; practicing without license, 1; insufficient application evidence, 3;

Left state before license action completed, 3; denial of application when other state license lost as result of Nebraska investigation, insufficient data provided, 4; cases pending, 4.

Higley and department director Henry Smith said such action usually is not publicized since most doctors involved often can straighten out their problems if they aren't publicized.

Lincoln Ed Board Asks Funds For 2 'Positive Peer' Projects

By DICK HOLMAN
Star Staff Writer

Kids know they can con adults, but they can't con other kids, says Ron Brandt, associate superintendent for instruction in the Lincoln Public Schools.

And because kids have a powerful influence on each other, Whittier and Everett Junior High Schools may use that peer pressure to help kids improve themselves and their self-image, beginning this fall.

It all depends on the Nebraska Crime Commission, which will be asked Friday to approve $83,454 in federal funds for the "Positive Peer Dynamics" project.

The Lincoln Board of Education Tuesday night approved a $4,636 (or 5%) share in the $92,727 project, to match 5% in state funds.

If approved, the Whittier program will be led by full-time staff members of Positive Peer Culture Co., who will move to Lincoln for the duration. At Everett, teachers will be trained to operate the program by Social Systems Co. staffers.

Project Aims

The programs attempt to develop positive attitudes among students, using methods such as identifying and training student leaders and forming "help groups."

The two junior highs were selected after data showed students there had "especially high" police and juvenile court contacts, compared to other schools.

But Everett and Whittier aren't tagged problem schools, Supt. John Prasch said, noting problems occur systemwide. His goal, he said, is "to learn how to apply it (Positive Peer Dynamics) generally" to improve school climates.

In an Omaha junior high and at the Kearney state boys school, similar projects helped bring about such positive changes as reduced vandalism, drug use and interracial fighting, Brandt said.

The school board also approved a $14,747 personal-social growth project, "a positive approach to drug abuse," at Lakeview Elementary School, and another $8,000 to train four East High School counselors to deal with troubled youngsters, then set up a program to help them.

Funds Denied

Prasch reported that a request for federal funds to run the Park Elementary bilingual program has been denied, "distressing news to us because we were well pleased with our results."

However, the bilingual project will be continued, he said, and restructured from "funds we can scrounge together." Federal money for a cultural awareness project was also denied, but plans for it are full steam ahead.

The board authorized a $366,584 request for federal Title I funds to operate programs for disadvantaged children. During 1974-75, 2,377 students were identified eligible to get Title I assistance.

Evaluator Carl (Nick) Novak said most Title I programs last year focused on reading, and achievement among students in 20 schools "was equal to or surpassed" that in the past two to three years. The new decentralized arrangement also enabled the district to serve more Title I students he said.

Junior high teachers still believe students need to improve their reading, Novak said, but he added that tests show they have the basic skills and just cannot perform "that total act we call reading."

A total of 1,196 students participated in Title I reading programs, and 268 in math programs.

Only Two Dropouts

Ed Schwartzkopf, career development superviser, reported that only two of 443 students enrolled in the Job Experience Training (JET) program dropped out of school last year.

At 0.5%, that contrasts favorably with the 5% dropout rate for the entire student body, he said.

JET, a federally sponsored program for low-income, disadvantaged students, encourages the 14- to 21-year-olds to remain in school, and get a diploma and job skill.

Of the 443 students served, seven in ten were white, two black, and the remainder Indian and Spanish-American. They worked in 444 different jobs for a total of 57,720 hours.

"We get great cooperation in placing these youngsters" in non-profit organizations, Schwartzkopf said, and many of the agencies eventually hire the students full-time.

JET operates three programs, for in-school and out-of-school students, and a summer program, paid by more than $600,000 in Comprehensive Employment Training Act funds. Only 10% is spent on administration, Schwartzkopf said, pleased that 90 cents of every dollar serves the students.

I recently noticed the city of Lincoln was cited for outstanding pedestrian safety efforts. How can this be when there have been so many car-pedestrian accidents?

—Curious, Lincoln

ACTION LINE: The award is for 1974 and Inspector Dean Leitner notes police are concerned about increasing pedestrian accidents. He says one problem is the fact that jaywalking is not illegal unless there are traffic signals at both ends of a block a person might be crossing. He says most accidents have been at mid-block and involved the six to ten year old age group. He says motorists tend to relax in summer when school is out and urges parents to caution their children about crossing the street.

I know that Helen Boosalis is Lincoln's first woman mayor. Since she served 16 years on the city council prior to running for mayor, does this mean she was also the first woman on the council?

—B.L., Lincoln

ACTION LINE: No. Mrs. David Dow became the first woman ever elected to the Lincoln City Council in 1945. She resigned before her term expired and Mrs. Fern Hubbard Orme was appointed to finish the term.

What is the most a person will ever have to pay for an overdue library book in Lincoln?

—J.D., Lincoln

ACTION LINE: Pat Dies, a library assistant for Bennet Martin Library, says the most a person will ever have to pay is $1.50 per book. This figure is reached after one month, but the price never goes any higher. However, if you lose a book you will have to replace it.

Is there an official scuba diving crew that is called in Lancaster County for the recovery of drowning victims?

—G.K., Lincoln

ACTION LINE: There are presently two such crews in the county, one with the Lincoln Fire Dept. and one with the Lancaster County Sheriff's office. For several years the fire department was the only one and jointly owned a boat with the Lincoln-Lancaster Civil Defense office. However, Fire Chief Dallas Johnson says there are no jurisdictional lines and his people will go wherever the mayor will let them to help out in these situations.

ACTION LINE: A spokesman for Lakeland said they made a mistake when they looked at the form you sent in. There is a place to mark either refund or credit. If you will return the credit voucher they sent you, they will refund your money.

HEALTH TIP

FROM THE NEBRASKA MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

Prevention of alcoholism begins at an early age.

The Nebraska Medical Association reports that effective prevention is directly proportional to the level of family living and adjustment that has been reached. In good family surroundings, most young people will automatically acquire the ability to adjust to life's demands. Children will quickly recognize that life will not always be easy; that there will be frustrations; and that everyone has certain physical and mental limitations.

Many alcoholics do not accept this aspect of living, but try to 'run away' into temporary oblivion provided by alcohol which only compounds the problem.

The example set by parents is most important. Too much value should not be placed on drinking. The giving of 'make-believe' drinks to children often establishes wrong values in their minds. Often, young people drink only because they want to be considered 'grown-up' and this is what they see grown-ups do regularly.

Alcoholism is most easily prevented at its onset, before the pattern is firmly established. Social custom appears to make prevention difficult.

The Nebraska Medical Association suggests that refusal to drink alcoholic beverages, with or without reason, is a person privilege that should always be respected.

To Your Good Health:

Follow Strict Diet For Maximum Results

By George C. Thosteson, M.D.

Dear Doctor: My doctor has told me I have non-tropical sprue. I have never read anything about this, and I would appreciate any information you can give me.

What will happen if I cheat once in a while? How much damage can be done? — Mrs. G.M.S.

This is also called "celiac disease." It is an inherited disorder which stems from an intolerance of gluten, a protein found in all cereals except corn and rice. The intolerance leads to changes in the absorbing membrane of the small intestine, which in turn results in an inadequate absorption of food. In fact, it is sometimes referred to as a malabsorption disorder.

Because of the faulty absorption, there can be diarrhea and distension of the abdomen, and stools may become loose and strong-smelling. They are also found to be high in fat particles. Other symptoms are weakness, muscle-wasting and anemia — all related to the fact that the body is not absorbing sufficient protein. A definite diagnosis can be made through a biopsy of the small intestine membrane.

The onset is usually slow. However, positive response to a gluten-free diet is usually quite prompt, often within two weeks for patients who adhere to it, which brings us back to your question about cheating.

Foods containing wheat, oats, rye and barley must be avoided. The diet is apt to become monotonous, but it must be followed closely for maximum results. A dietician should explain the diet explicitly to you to allow you to enjoy as much variety as possible. If you have done so, ask your doctor to provide a list of allowed foods.

Cheating can be deceptively easy. You may escape repercussions and symptoms after one or even two cheating episodes, but more often this would cause a relapse.

The prospects for a return to health are excellent if you can learn to live with your diet. In addition, iron and vitamin supplements are usually needed to correct these deficiencies brought about by the malabsorption.

Cheating on a diet is sort of like cheating when balancing your checking account. Sooner or later an accounting will be forced on you.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: An eye doctor has informed my wife that she has a cataract and that she must have surgery. He told her that he might use the new ultrasonic vibration procedure for removing the cataract. What do you think of this procedure?—T.P.A.

This is an effective method for cataract removal. The method is rather new.

Generally, surgeons use the procedure they feel most comfortable and familiar with and seems most suitable to each individual case. This explains the variety of methods currently being used for such procedures as cataract removal.

I would advise you to follow your surgeon's advice.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: My right testicle is twice as big as my left. I suffer no pain or any other discomfort. I am 71 years old. Is this marked difference in size any cause for worry?—R.P.H.

The swelling may not be of the testicle proper, but an accumulation of fluid within the scrotal sac. In that case it would be called a "hydrocele," which is less serious than a tumor of the testicle. But a testicular tumor can produce a firm, painless swelling. Any testicle swelling should be investigated.

Unless properly treated, both glaucoma and cataracts can lead to blindness. If you are afflicted with either of these ailments, or know someone who is, write to Dr. Thosteson in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 3999, Elgin, Ill. 60120, for his booklet, "Cataracts and Glaucoma." Enclose a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope and 25 cents.

Minority Jobs Unit To Seek Meeting With Exon

By The Associated Press

Members of a committee considering an affirmative action plan for hiring state employes agreed Tuesday to seek a meeting with Gov. J. James Exon to discuss funding for such a program.

The committee is seeking ways to encourage state agencies to more actively recruit minority employes and promote current minority employes.

Stan Porras, director of the Mexican-American Commission, presented the results of a survey which showed that 20 of 71 state agencies responding have an affirmative action plan. The survey covered 17,554 of approximately 28,000 state employes.

But Porras said many agencies that claim to have an affirmative action plan are not carrying it out and have a low proportion of minority employes. He said a plan which would cover all state agencies is needed.

Personnel Director Roy Gardner said federal funds are available to develop an affirmative action program for the state, but added that the state would have to pick up the funding in the next fiscal year.

Members of the group hope to receive assurances from the governor that continued funding would be available.

The committee includes representatives of the Mexican-American Commission, Indian Commission, Commission on the Status of Women, Office of Planning and Programming, Personnel Department and Equal Opportunity Commission.

Grand Island Hotel Corp. Files Bankruptcy Petition

Omaha (AP) — The Grand Island Hotel Corp. filed a petition for general bankruptcy in Omaha Monday, listing debts of $151,375 and property and assets of $46,775.

The corporation, which leases the Yancey Hotel from the Second Island Development Corp., has operated the hotel since June 1968.

Lincoln Benefit Life Co. of Lincoln filed a foreclosure action in Hall County District Court against the hotel last month.

Lincoln Benefit asked in the petition that the defendants be foreclosed of all equity of redemption or other interest in the hotel and that it be sold according to law.

Lincoln Benefit asked that proceeds of the sale be used to pay on its mortgage note, plus interest and the cost of the suit.

A definite diagnosis can be made through a biopsy of the small intestine membrane.

The onset is usually slow. However, positive response to a gluten-free diet is usually quite prompt, often within two weeks for patients who adhere to it, which brings us back to your question about cheating.

Foods containing wheat, oats, rye and barley must be avoided. The diet is apt to become monotonous, but it must be followed closely for maximum results. A dietician should explain the diet explicitly to you to allow you to enjoy as much variety as possible. If you have done so, ask your doctor to provide a list of allowed foods.

Cheating can be deceptively easy. You may escape repercussions and symptoms after one or even two cheating episodes, but more often this would cause a relapse.

The prospects for a return to health are excellent if you can learn to live with your diet. In addition, iron and vitamin supplements are usually needed to correct these deficiencies brought about by the malabsorption.

Cheating on a diet is sort of like cheating when balancing your checking account. Sooner or later an accounting will be forced on you.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: An eye doctor has informed my wife that she has a cataract and that she must have surgery. He told her that he might use the new ultrasonic vibration procedure for removing the cataract. What do you think of this procedure?—T.P.A.

This is an effective method for cataract removal. The method is rather new.

Generally, surgeons use the procedure they feel most comfortable and familiar with and seems most suitable to each individual case. This explains the variety of methods currently being used for such procedures as cataract removal.

I would advise you to follow your surgeon's advice.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: My right testicle is twice as big as my left. I suffer no pain or any other discomfort. I am 71 years old. Is this marked difference in size any cause for worry?—R.P.H.

The swelling may not be of the testicle proper, but an accumulation of fluid within the scrotal sac. In that case it would be called a "hydrocele," which is less serious than a tumor of the testicle. But a testicular tumor can produce a firm, painless swelling. Any testicle swelling should be investigated.

Unless properly treated, both glaucoma and cataracts can lead to blindness. If you are afflicted with either of these ailments, or know someone who is, write to Dr. Thosteson in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 3999, Elgin, Ill. 60120, for his booklet, "Cataracts and Glaucoma." Enclose a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope and 25 cents.

Minority Jobs Unit To Seek Meeting With Exon

By The Associated Press

Members of a committee considering an affirmative action plan for hiring state employes agreed Tuesday to seek a meeting with Gov. J. James Exon to discuss funding for such a program.

The committee is seeking ways to encourage state agencies to more actively recruit minority employes and promote current minority employes.

Stan Porras, director of the Mexican-American Commission, presented the results of a survey which showed that 20 of 71 state agencies responding have an affirmative action plan. The survey covered 17,554 of approximately 28,000 state employes.

But Porras said many agencies that claim to have an affirmative action plan are not carrying it out and have a low proportion of minority employes. He said a plan which would cover all state agencies is needed.

Personnel Director Roy Gardner said federal funds are available to develop an affirmative action program for the state, but added that the state would have to pick up the funding in the next fiscal year.

Members of the group hope to receive assurances from the governor that continued funding would be available.

The committee includes representatives of the Mexican-American Commission, Indian Commission, Commission on the Status of Women, Office of Planning and Programming, Personnel Department and Equal Opportunity Commission.

Grand Island Hotel Corp. Files Bankruptcy Petition

Omaha (AP) — The Grand Island Hotel Corp. filed a petition for general bankruptcy in Omaha Monday, listing debts of $151,375 and property and assets of $46,775.

The corporation, which leases the Yancey Hotel from the Second Island Development Corp., has operated the hotel since June 1968.

Lincoln Benefit Life Co. of Lincoln filed a foreclosure action in Hall County District Court against the hotel last month.

Lincoln Benefit asked in the petition that the defendants be foreclosed of all equity of redemption or other interest in the hotel and that it be sold according to law.

Lincoln Benefit asked that proceeds of the sale be used to pay on its mortgage note, plus interest and the cost of the suit.

Whelan, Varner Eye Research On Solar, Wind Energy In State

By DON BEMAN
United Press International

Lt. Gov. Gerald Whelan said Tuesday work on an application for locating a solar research institute, which would be the only one of its kind in the nation, in Nebraska is underway.

Last week, Whelan and D. B. Varner, University of Nebraska president, traveled to Washington to visit officials with the Federal Energy Research and Development Agency on the possibility of assistance in setting up solar research efforts in Nebraska.

"The trip was a success," Whelan told UPI in that the agency at least hasn't already made up its mind on the location for a solar reseach institute.

However, the lieutenant governor said he couldn't say that Nebraska has the institute in the bag by any means.

"We're trying not to be unrealistic about this and we do have a lot of things going for us," he said.

But at the same time, Whelan said the agency expects between 100 and 200 applications from state government, universities and private businesses in the 49 other states.

In other words, he said, "There's no reason to think Nebraska has the inside track on this. But we're going to make a good effort to get it."

The institute envisioned by the agency, Whelan said, would have an annual research budget of between $20 million and $50 million. It would be involved not only in solar energy research but wind energy research as well.

In putting together the team to write the application, Whelan said he and Varner decided that all aspects of government and private industry should be involved.

He also said, however, that exact guidelines for such proposals would not be available until August. But he said there's a lot of preliminary work that can be done in the meantime.

In addition to the solar research institute, Whelan and Varner explored the possibility of Nebraska's getting federal assistance for a research program which would probe the use of solar and wind energy production techniques for industrial purposes. The pair were specifically interested in agriculture-related industries.

The university is already involved with the Lincoln Electric System in a solar energy production research program on the residential level.

On the industrial scene, Whelan said he and Varner envision research into the use of energy produced by harnessing the sun and the wind for such things as animal housing and for grain drying.

Whelan said an application separate from the research institute, which would only involve basic research, would be studied. The two are interested in not only basic research in the area by actual prototye operations.

Lewis Lists Alternatives Awaiting Ed Service Units

Alliance (AP) — State Sen. Frank Lewis of Bellevue says only three alternatives await Educational Service Units (ESUs) in the state.

At a interim hearing by the Legislature's Education Committee here, Lewis said the role of the units should precisely defined, or some school districts be permitted to leave the service units. As a third alternative, he suggested that the entire service unit system be abolished.

The day-long hearing saw discussion on special education and the role of the ESU in Nebraska's educational system.

The dominant problem for special education in the state has been money, and confusion over LB403, the special education funding bill.

Alliance ESU Superintendent Martin Petersen said he has planned the school's handicapped educational programs for next year although he is not sure of the availability of funding.

Petersen admitted a reduction of services will occur.

Lewis said guidelines for the funding of special education are created to fit the amount of money appropriated by the legislature. Usually the funds are deficient, he said.

Others testifying before the committee urged a state-paid psychological analysis service and a change in the labeling system of handicapped youngsters.

Reinstatement Tests Thursday For Policeman

Suspended policeman Stuart Wetzler will undergo Thursday afternoon the mental and physical examinations required by the Lincoln Police Department for his reinstatement, Capt. John Miller said Tuesday.

Miller said an analysis of the examinations may be finished Friday.

Stuart Wetzler, 31, of 1630 N. 56th, Apt. 13, was suspended July 16 because, police say, he was 30 days late in filing a hit-and-run accident report and because of concern "expressed by a number of people" about his mental stability.

Police officials deny Wetzler's claim that he was suspended because he wrote a letter to Mayor Helen Boosalis criticizing the department.

Bill Aims At Stifling Political Dissent, Disloyalty

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the third in a four-part series examining legislation proposed in the Senate, S. 1. The bill is a controversial rewriting of the federal criminal laws.)

By JACK C. LANDAU
(c) Newhouse News Service

Washington — When Richard Nixon was president, his administration marshaled its executive powers to oppose and intimidate political opposition and dissent.

This included breaking into the Democratic National Committee headquarters; wiretapping political dissidents and government employes suspected of political disloyalty, arranging for the illegal mass arrest of 13,000 anti-war demonstrators, having the Internal Revenue Service monitor the tax returns of opponents, permitting the Justice Department and the CIA to compile dossiers on more than 10,000 persons including congressmen and other political leaders, setting up a plan for a White House secret police and prosecuting anti-war leaders such as the Berrigan brothers.

Now Nixon is gone. But many of his views on the powers government should have to stifle political dissent are alive in Congress in the form of a bill, mainly drafted by the Nixon administration, to reorganize the federal criminal code.

The bill, known as S. 1 (the first bill introduced in the new Senate) was introduced in January with strong bipartisan support and is a carbon copy of the Nixon administration's proposal, which was introduced in March 1973 but died during the Watergate tumult.

The bill, as introduced, would give the federal government new or expanded powers to:

—Authorize federal police to break up most large political demonstrations at will.

—Authorize criminal prosecutions against present and former government employes who give out information that the government itself is breaking the law or who disclose facts contesting information put out by the White House.

—Authorize the FBI to wiretap popular or dissident political leaders.

—Authorize arrests of demonstrators against so-called "political trials."

Political demonstrations: One of the most vexing problems for the Nixon administration were the hundreds of thousands of mostly young anti-Vietnam war demonstrators who converged on Washington to scream their opposition within earshot of the White House, the Justice Department and the Pentagon.

While Vice President Spiro Agnew called them "bums" and Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell compared their demonstrations to "the Russian Revolution," initially the administration believed that the First Amendment protected their right to demonstrate in the nation's capital.

In general, city and state officials in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, Boston and other cities stayed away from anti-war demonstrations unless they involved serious violence.

On May Day 1971, however, the Justice Department ordered Washington, D.C., police to conduct sweeping dragnet arrests in areas where some demonstrators had blocked traffic in the capital.

A total of 13,000 persons were arrested. Many said they were on their way to work or were just watching the demonstration.

When lawyers protested that the police had arrested thousands without any probable cause as specified by the Fourth Amendment, then-Assistant Atty. Gen. (now Supreme Court Justice) William Rehnquist replied that the Fourth Amendment had been suspended by "partial martial law."

The courts agreed with the demonstrators and dismissed almost all the arrests on grounds they were unconstitutional.

The bill provides that it is a crime to disobey the order of any "public servant" to "move (or) disperse" if the order "is reasonably designed to protect persons or property."

It would make it a crime to hold a demonstration which would "harm, embarrass or annoy" another person.

The provisions give federal law enforcement authorities broad discretion to break up political demonstrations. In most large political demonstrations, there is some conduct which would "embarrass" or block "pedestrian traffic."

Government employe dissent: A problem which became almost a mania in the Nixon White House was political disloyalty of government employees toward the Nixon administration.

When former Interior Secretary Walter Hickle questioned Vietnam, he was peremptorily fired.

When the New York Times published a story on the SALT talks, former and present employes of the National Security Council had their telephones tapped.

When Daniel Ellsberg leaked the Pentagon Papers, the White House ordered a break-in at the office of his California psychiatrist.

When former CIA employe Victor Marchetti wrote a book about the CIA, the administration obtained an injunction against its publication.

The bill has several provisions to silence the present government worker or the worker who quits and then wants to tell his story to the public.

One provision would make it a crime for a present or former government employe to give out any "private information submitted for a government purpose." Another would make it a crime to disclose "private correspondence" of a government agency.

Wiretapping: S. 1 would expand federal wiretapping authority in several new ways to permit eavesdropping on political dissidents.

One section would give new wiretap authority to discover who is leaking "classified information" or any "national defense information" to the press or to political opponents even though the information is harmless.

Another section would permit the government to wiretap if the government believes "an emergency situation exists" with regard to "national security" or "organized crime" and the government believes there is not enough time to obtain a court order as required by present law.

Because the disclosure of almost all types of information from the Defense and State Departments would be, under the bill, new "national security" crimes, the wiretapping section would authorize warrantless wiretaps where no authority exists now.

A third section would make it a crime for any government employe to disclose any "classified information" involving "national defense."

Because almost all information of any importance is "classified" by the government, a former or present government employe would go to jail for disclosing such things as White House-ordered break-ins, the Huston secret police plan or even those portions of the Watergate cover-up which — at the time — were allegedly undertaken to protect the CIA.

Does the government really need these new or expanded powers which could be used against political dissent? That is one question which Congress will debate this year on S. 1.

Bill Aims At Stifling Political Dissent, Disloyalty

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the third in a four-part series examining legislation proposed in the Senate, S. 1. The bill is a controversial rewriting of the federal criminal laws.)

By JACK C LANDAU
(c) Newhouse News Service

Washington — When Richard Nixon was president, his administration marshaled its executive powers to oppose and intimidate political opposition and dissent

This included breaking into the Democratic National Committee headquarters, wiretapping political dissidents and government employes suspected of political disloyalty, arranging for the illegal mass arrest of 13,000 anti-war demonstrators, having the Internal Revenue Service monitor the tax returns of opponents, permitting the Justice Department and the CIA to compile dossiers on more than 10,000 persons including congressmen and other political leaders, setting up a plan for a White House secret police and prosecuting anti-war leaders such as the Berrigan brothers

Now Nixon is gone But many of his views on the powers government should have to stifle political dissent are alive in Congress in the form of a bill, mainly drafted by the Nixon administration, to reorganize the federal criminal code

The bill, known as S 1 (the first bill introduced in the new Senate) was introduced in January with strong bipartisan support and is a carbon copy of the Nixon administration's proposal, which was introduced in March 1973 but died during the Watergate tumult.

The bill, as introduced, would give the federal government new or expanded powers to —Authorize federal police to break up most large political demonstrations at will.

—Authorize criminal prosecutions against present and former government employes who give out information that the government itself is breaking the law or who disclose facts contesting information put out by the White House.

—Authorize the FBI to wiretap popular or dissident political leaders

—Authorize arrests of demonstrators against so-called "political trials"

Political demonstrations: One of the most vexing problems for the Nixon administration were the hundreds of thousands of mostly young anti-Vietnam war demonstrators who converged on Washington to scream their opposition within earshot of the White House, the Justice Department and the Pentagon

While Vice President Spiro Agnew called them "bums" and Atty Gen John N Mitchell compared their demonstrations to "the Russian Revolution," initially the administration believed that the First Amendment protected their right to demonstrate in the nation's capital

In general, city and state officials in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, Boston and other cities stayed away from anti-war demonstrations unless they involved serious violence

On May Day 1971, however, the Justice Department ordered Washington, D C, police to conduct sweeping dragnet arrests in areas where some demonstrators had blocked traffic in the capital

A total of 13,000 persons were arrested Many said they were on their way to work or were just watching the demonstration

When lawyers protested that the police had arrested thousands without any probable cause as specified by the Fourth Amendment, then-Assistant Atty Gen (now Supreme Court Justice) William Rehnquist replied that the Fourth Amendment had been suspended by partial martial law"

The courts agreed with the demonstrators and dismissed almost all the arrests on grounds they were unconstitutional

The bill provides that it is a crime to disobey the order of any public servant to "move (or) disperse" if the order "is reasonably designed to protect persons or property"

It would make it a crime to hold a demonstration which would "harm, embarrass or annoy' another person

The provisions give federal law enforcement authorities broad discretion to break up political demonstrations In most large political demonstrations, there is some conduct which would "embarrass' or block "pedestrian traffic"

Government employe dissent: A problem which became almost a mania in the Nixon White House was political disloyalty of government employees toward the Nixon administration

When former Interior Secretary Walter Hickle questioned Vietnam, he was peremptorily fired

When the New York Times published a story on the SALT talks, former and present employes of the National Security Council had their telephones tapped

When Daniel Ellsberg leaked the Pentagon Papers, the White House ordered a break-in at the office of his California psychiatrist.

When former CIA employe Victor Marchetti wrote a book about the CIA, the administration obtained an injunction against its publication.

The bill has several provisions to silence the present government worker or the worker who quits and then wants to tell his story to the public

One provision would make it a crime for a present or former government employe to give out any "private information submitted for a government purpose." Another would make it a crime to disclose "private correspondence" of a government agency.

Wiretapping: S 1 would expand federal wiretapping authority in several new ways to permit eavesdropping on political dissidents

One section would give new wiretap authority to discover who is leaking "classified information" or any "national defense information" to the press or to political opponents even though the information is harmless

Another section would permit the government to wiretap if the government believes "an emergency situation exists" with regard to "national security" or "organized crime" and the government believes there is not enough time to obtain a court order as required by present law

Because the disclosure of almost all types of information from the Defense and State Departments would be, under the bill, new "national security" crimes, the wiretapping section would authorize warrantless wiretaps where no authority exists now

A third section would make it a crime for any government employe to disclose any "classified information" involving "national defense."

Because almost all information of any importance is "classified" by the government, a former or present government employe would go to jail for disclosing such things as White House-ordered break-ins, the Huston secret police plan or even those portions of the Watergate cover-up which — at the time — were allegedly undertaken to protect the CIA.

Does the government really need these new or expanded powers which could be used against political dissent? That is one question which Congress will debate this year on S 1.

Beatrice State Home. . .

Suit Settlement Predicted Soon

Omaha (AP) — It appears that parties involved in the Beatrice State Home suit are in substantial agreement on the major points of contention, and that they might be near an out-of-court settlement, a source close to the case said Tuesday.

Only the specifics of the agreement need to be worked out, said the source, who asked not to be identified.

Any agreement in the suit will have to be approved by U.S. District Court Judge Albert G. Schatz, who began hearing the case Monday. There is no jury.

The plaintiffs contend that some mentally retarded persons at the Beatrice State Home are not getting adequate treatment, and that other, less-restrictive settings are available or should be made available to the patients.

The trial was recessed Monday after about 90 minutes of testimony and was to have resumed Tuesday, with Dr. Philip Roos of Arlington, Tex., on the witness stand. Roos is the executive director of the National Association for Retarded Citizens, and was the only witness to testify during Monday's session.

However, Schatz announced a delay in the court's proceedings until Wednesday morning, partly due to a speaking commitment at Creighton University.

It was learned that attorneys for both sides met all Monday afternoon with experts in the field of mental retardation, and Schatz said the lawyers would continue to work on the legal ramifications involved, and the possibility of a consent decree.

A consent decree is an agreement, which is sanctioned by the court and is binding both parties to the litigation.

During his testimony Monday, Roos said mental retardation involves difficulties in learning, judgment, problem solving and retention. It differs from mental illness, he said, and retarded persons' conditions can be improved, but the conditions generally persist.

Roos testified there are about 250 known causes for retardation but the cause is unknown in 75% of the cases. He added that about 3% of the population will be retarded at some time in their life, with about one out of 10 cases being mild.

He said the trend has been toward community programs and that institutions are "less conductive" to child rearing.

Roos testified that trends in the field point to more individualization of treatment and treating the retarded as normally as possible.

In his opening statement, State Asst. Atty. Gen. Mel Kammerlohr said the state's position doesn't differ substantially from the plaintiffs'. He said "we think the retarded should have the best care in the least restrictive environment."

Prisoner Arrested At Friend's

A state prisoner who failed to show up at his hair dressing classes in downtown Lincoln Tuesday morning was in police custody shortly after noon.

Police said they arrested Joseph Salazar Jr., 30, at a friend's apartment at 2348 O St. at about 1 p.m.

Authorities sais Salazar left a work release center at 24th and R on his bicycle at about 7 a.m.

A telephone call was placed to the beauty school where he was studying stating that he was ill and would not be at work, authorities said.

His absence came to light when he failed to appear at the Nebraska Regional Center, where he had a medical examination scheduled for 10 a.m.

Salazar had been a prisoner since 1966, serving a life sentence for second degree murder in Adams County.

Union Local OKs Offer, But Only After Fistfight

Omaha (AP) — At least five persons were injured Monday night in a fight that erupted after a contract vote by members of Operating Engineers, Local 571.

About 215 persons attended the meeting, in which the local accepted a new contract offer from the Omaha Building Contractors Association.

Union officials said the fight involved factions for and against the proposal.

The new contract calls for an immediate wage hike of 10.9%, and was approved by a 2-1 margin, according to Orva Metzler, union business manager.

Two of the injured in the fight required medical attention.

Lawrence P. Shattuck, 58, of Omaha, was hospitalized. He was listed in satisfactory condition Tuesday.

Another Omahan, Melvin Dickman, 20, was treated at a local hospital and released.

Last week, a Douglas County District Court judge ordered the operating engineers back to work, after the contractors association and Peter Kiewit Sons' Co., filed a suit. The suit charged the union with violating a no-strike clause in its contract.

The strike, which began June 25, halted work on about 15 major projects in the Omaha-area, because members of other unions honored the picket lines set up by the operating engineers. The stoppage affected an estimated 4,000 workers.

After the court order, the engineers returned to work, but said they disagreed with the contentions that they were violating a no-strike clause in their contract.

After Monday's vote, attorneys for the contractors association and Kiewit said all legal action will be dropped.

The new pay package calls for a 98-cents-per-hour increase, retroactive to June 1. The increase will boost the union's top pay to $10.00 per hour.

The union had been seeking an immediate raise of $1.25 per hour.

Nebraska Students Speak Many Different Languages

By DICK HOLMAN
Star Staff Writer

Significant numbers of elementary school students who have limited ability in the English language are dropping out before they reach secondary school, according to Fred Rodriguez.

The Nebraska Department of Education consultant found 665 students in the state whose first language is other than English. And he told the State Board of Education there are "easily" more than 1,000 students who need special help in English.

In a Bilingual Education Task Force report the board requested Rodriquez to conduct last February, 323 school districts were surveyed. About 262 responded.

No English At All

Of the 665 students identified, 220 have no command of the English language and 445 have a minimal command. The total included 493 elementary students and 172 in secondary schools.

Thus, Rodriguez deduced that the grade-schoolers' "language problem" is a barrier to completing their high school education.

Only Class II through VI school districts were surveyed; the 900 small, rural Class I districts aren't represented. That drew objections from Lexington board member Marilyn Fowler, who said Class I students are continually underserved.

The board accepted Rodriguez' report, which stated even the preliminary data are significant enough "to justify some action" by the state to improve Nebraska schools' bilingual-bicultural programs, or start them where none exist.

Lincoln has such a program in Spanish at Park Elementary School.

Bilingual-bicultural education is a total self-development program to help students learn and reinforce their own language and culture. Simultaneously, they acquire ability to function in another language and behave in patterns of the second culture.

The board took no official action on Rodriguez' recommendations, but agreed on the need to adopt a policy and set of guidelines. Education Commissioner Anne Campbell ordered those devised for later board approval.

Rodriguez said the number of languages he found spoken in Nebraska homes is "most astonishing."

The list includes Spanish, Japanese, Indian, Asian Indian, East Indian, Iranian, Czech, Slavic, German, Swahili, Italian, Filipino, Ukranian, Norwegian, Korean, Latvian, Nigerian, Sioux, Omaha and Lakota Indian, Bohemian, Portugese, Arabic, Chinese, Persian, Greek, Polish, Twi, Vietnamese, French, Flemish, Pakistanian, Egyptian, Trukese, Pompango and Taglo.

There is some question among federal officials, Rodreiguez said, about whether the American black dialect may be considered a second language in U.S. schools.

In Region I surveyed — Lancaster and Saunders Counties — the report lists 28 students nonfunctional in English, of whom 15 spoke Spanish. Another 40 in the two counties had only minimal command of English.

In Lincoln, the survey found 646 black students, 202 Indian, 93 orientals and 282 with Spanish surnames.

Board members noted one Nebraska student, an 11th-grader, who speaks Persian but no English, and they wondered how he had advanced to high school.

Especially Refugees

Rodriguez explained the student is probably an immigrant, and Nebraska schools will have to "deal with that more and more," especially to serve Vietnamese refugees.

Mel Nielsen, foreign language consultant, reported that the Education Department will have kits available by Aug. 1 to help teachers in "English as a second language" programs. The kits are being developed specifically to serve schools which must educate more than 200 recently-arrived Vietnamese, who have either minimal or no competence in English.

Nielsen said the department is also adapting kits to serve students who have other native languages, such as Spanish.

In a related report, Glen E. Shafer, administrator for teacher certification, said the Education Department will follow existing guidelines for teacher endorsement in bilingual-bicultural education, unless they're updated by the Nebraska Council on Teacher Education.

Shafer said he has contacted all 50 states and found that "only a very few" have teacher programs leading to such an endorsement. However, in a few states, interest in promoting the concept is increasing, he said.

10 Omahans Named To Integration Panel

Omaha (AP) — Six whites and four blacks have been named to a court-appointed committee to help the Omaha School District formulate its comprehensive plans for the integration of its student body.

The 10-member committee was announced Tuesday by U.S. District Court Judge Albert G. Schatz.

Schatz has been ordered to oversee the district's integration efforts, which were ordered by the U.S. 8th Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis.

The Board of Education will appeal the circuit court decision to the U.S. Supreme Court, but will go ahead with integration plans in the meantime.

In selecting the committee members, Schatz said he did his own investigation, and interviewed the potential members personally.

Named to the committee were:

Dr. Raymond Shaddy of Creighton University.

William Ramsey, assistant director of development at Boys Town.

Mrs. Della M. Bonner, a former junior high school teacher now active in the Urban League and other community activities.

Mrs. M. T. Crummer, an Omaha housewife who has been very active in community affairs involving young people.

Mrs. Mary E. Brown, a housewife who is a past president of the Omaha Council of PTAs.

Dale TeKolste of Northern Natural Gas.

Tom Norwood, assistant dean in the College of Education at the University of Nebraska at Omaha and a former Omaha school teacher.

Samuel Crawford of Creighton University, a former Omaha school teacher and administrator.

Robert Moriarty, former member of an advisory committee to the superintendent of the Omaha School District and presently employed in the personnel management division at Mutual of Omaha.

Kenneth Young, personnel manager of Control Document Corp., of Omaha, and very active in community affairs.

Three of the committee members, Mrs. Brown, Moriarty and Norwood, served on the Omaha Community Committee.

The committee spent six months last year working to devise programs to better balance the black-white ratio in the Omaha schools.

Chambers Asks Douglas Defend Speed Limit Law

By United Press International

Sen. Ernest Chambers of Omaha Tuesday suggested to the Unicameral's Executive Board that Atty. Gen. Paul Douglas defend the constitutionality of Nebraska's 55-mile-per-hour speed limit law before the State Supreme Court.

In a letter to Sen. Eugene Mahoney of Omaha, executive board chairman, Chambers said, "I am formally requesting that the Executive Board direct the attorney general to defend (the law) before the Nebraska Supreme Court."

Chambers also said that he is prepared to discuss the matter with the board if it wished.

The Supreme Court on July 11 agreed to accept as an original action a suit requested by Douglas in an attempt to determine the validity of the new speed limit law. Douglas, however, filed his request with the court, saying the law could not be defended constitutionally.

The issue involved in the court test is a section which Chambers had attached to the legislation.

That section provides for a maximum fine of $10 for going 10 mph over the speed limit on the interstate. The section also says that no court costs may be collected in connection with such fines and no drivers license points may be assessed.

Douglas requested the court accept the case as an original action, bypassing the normal procedure of filing in the district court and then appealing, in response to a request from Gov. J. James Exon.

Exon contended that if the law is allowed to stand as amended by Chambers, law enforcement efforts would be at best hampered if not rendered useless.

Highway Safety Chief Appalled At Slaughter

The administrator of Nebraska's highway safety program said Tuesday he is "appalled at the senseless slaughter of Nebraskans which has taken place on the roads in our state in the last four days."

"Between 6 p.m. Friday and 6 a.m. Monday morning, nine Nebraskans died on our roads," said administrator Sam Franco. "Six died over the weekend and three died early (Monday) morning."

"This type of senseless killing must stop," Franco said.

He said that he's certain if Nebraskans were to hear that nine people had been shot over the weekend "they would be shocked." Yet, Franco said, "many tend to treat roadway fatalities as commonplace, even inevitable."

He noted that last year at this time 207 people had died on Nebraska roads.

"Through Sunday night that figure stood at 178," he said, and with the three Monday the figure rose to 181.

"I wish I could say it were nine lower and the nine who died recently were here today," Franco said.

Hastings City Sales Tax Killed; Mill Levy Hiked

Hastings (UPI) — A proposed city sales tax of 1% is dead at least for one more year, but the property tax mill levy will increase four to five mills to fund the city's budget, city officials said Tuesday.

The city council and representatives of the business community met on the proposed budget and decided against implementing the sales tax at least until next year.

Officials said they will wait and see what action is taken by Grand Island and Kearney on city sales tax proposals.

A public hearing will be held on the budget Thursday night, but the city sales tax proposal will not be considered, officials said.

If the sales tax had been implemented, city officials said, the mill levy would have decreased about 10 mills.

Lightning Hits Hastings Chapel

Hastings (AP) — The All Fatihs Chapel at Good Samaritan Village, a retirement home, was struck by lightning and suffered minor damage from fire early Tuesday. Police Chief Monte Kohoe said the fire was difficult to reach due to construction of the building, but once located, it was extinguished quickly. No one was injured.

Art Group Elects Hawkins

Fremont (AP) — Ralph Hawkins of Hebron has been elected president of the Association of Nebraska Art Clubs, succeeding Chauncey Nelson of Omaha. Hawkins was elected during the association's annual convention here. The weeklong meeting began last Friday on the Midland Lutheran College campus, and features art exhibits, workshops and business meetings.

Braasch Pleads Innocent To Murder

Hastings (AP) — A Hastings man appearing in Adams County District Court has entered an innocent plea to charges of first degree murder. Charged in connection with the March 14 shooting death of Loren J. Bolte, 35, of rural Hastings, is Terry Braasch, 27. Braasch allegedly went to the Hastings machine shop where both men were employed, and shot Bolte with a shotgun. Authorities said the two men had had a long-standing disagreement before the incident. Trial has been set for Aug. 25.

Madrid Firm Files For Bankruptcy

Omaha (AP) — General bankruptcy papers were filed in U.S. District Court in Omaha by the SLB Corp. of Perkins County, a Madrid corporation. SLB listed public entertainment as its chief business. The corporation listed claims of more than $86,000 and assets of $60. The petition said the corporation booked entertainers for performances at Horseshoe Bend Park in Madrid from last December through July 13. The petition listed Donald Steinwart as an officer of the corporation.

Revitalizing Downtown Area Eyed

Grand Island (UPI) — The Community Development Advisory Board has taken what could be the first steps in a campaign to change the deteriorating eastern face of downtown Grand Island. A crowd of 50 persons showed up at a hearing for the first public discussion of how to spend $914,000 to revitalize the downtown area. Bob Meyer of the Downtown Retail Trade Council said a civic center study should be expedited by the Bicentennial committee. He said the center might be located in the eastern downtown area on urban renewal authority land.

Terrytown Awaiting Outcome Of Lottery Suit

By JOEL THORSON
Outstate Nebraska Bureau

The tiny Panhandle community of Terrytown, the only municipality in Nebraska whose voters have authorized a municipal lottery, is awaiting the outcome of an Omaha court suit before it proceeds with a lottery of its own.

In question is the vagueness of the state lottery law, according to Terrytown village attorney Howard Olsen.

Spokesmen of other cities and towns have reacted with indifference, confusion, uncertainty and disapproval to the Omaha lottery's proposal to sell its tickets in outstate communities, with revenues being shared with each sponsoring town.

In Lincoln, both Mayor Helen Boosalis and City Council Chairman Max Denney expressed disapproval of any Lincoln involvement in a lottery. Both said they felt lotteries depend too heavily on people who can least afford to indulge in them.

Several other municipal spokesmen said the possibility of lottery revenue had not been discussed in their towns. Others, like Terrytown's Olsen, were waiting for key legal questions to be resolved.

Omaha attorney Martin Cannon has filed suit seeking a permanent injunction against the Omaha lottery. Cannon claims it is illegal because it was not authorized by public ballot and allegedly benefits private interests.

A constitutional amendment approved by state voters in 1968 enabled the Unicameral to pass legislation the next year authorizing municipalities and nonprofit associations to hold lotteries for charity and community betterment.

Unlike the proposed Terrytown lottery — which was approved by voters, 27-3 — the Omaha lottery was authorized by the City Council.

No public vote was needed, supporters say, because the lottery is being run by a nonprofit organization, with half the proceeds going to the city and half to community improvement projects.

But Terrytown's legal concerns, Olsen said, are whether the village can legally hire a consulting firm for a percentage of the proceeds and whether tickets can be sold outside the authorizing town's limits.

Since Terrytown is so small, Olsen said, it couldn't afford to operate its own lottery nor sustain one with ticket sales from its small population base.

Olsen said he is also concerned about the village's liability for any obligations that might be incurred if a lottery failed.

The Terrytown lottery would have to be run by a large national consulting firm with experience and enough funds to back up an assurance of liability for all obligations, he said.

A South Dakota lottery was scotched by the state attorney general after six weeks of operation, which "cost everybody a lot of money," Olsen said.

Even if legal questions are resolved in Terrytown's favor, he said, the village would probably start small, operating only in the Panhandle, to make sure the lottery is viable before it incurs many obligations.

Would Terrytown operate a lottery in competition with Omaha's? That would depend on the Omaha lottery's plans for the Panhandle, Olsen said.

The village attorney said he would not reject the sale of Omaha lottery tickets in Terrytown if a revenue-sharing arrangement were offered.

Lincoln's Mayor Boosalis said she is "not favorable to a lottery at this time," adding the statement applied to any Lincoln-run lottery as well as the sale of Omaha lottery tickets in Lincoln.

Lotteries are supported by "people who can least afford to be involved," she said.

Ray Gilbertson of the League of Nebraska Municipalities said lotteries were not discussed formally or, to his knowledge, informally at the league's conference in Grand Island last Friday.

But town spokespersons have a variety of reactions:

—York mayor LeRoy Vineyard said lotteries are "a fine method of income" but might not be well received in small communities. If proposed for York, he said, lottery involvement would have to be approved by the public and operated by York to maintain local control.

—Fremont city administrator Jack Sutton said Fremont is near its levy limit and a lottery is "a painless way of getting money into the city coffers." He said he didn't know whether a lottery would be considered acceptable by the community but that lottery revenue would become more attractive if it were the only alternative to a city sales tax.

If employed, revenue funds should be used to finance general services instead of capital improvement projects, he said.

—Elkhorn city clerk Donna Klebe said a lottery hasn't been discussed there. "I'm against lotteries personally," she said, because participants don't win enough or often enough.

—Funk mayor Ray Hasselquist said he didn't think a lottery "would pay down here" because Funk is so small. The town wouldn't be interested in an offer by the Omaha lottery, he said, but if tickets were available in Holdrege, people who wanted could buy them there.

Funk has a low mill levy and no need of lottery revenue, he said.

—Wynot mayor Erwin Cook said lottery revenue has never been discussed in Wynot but added his town has no great need for a new funding source. Its mill levy is low and has changed only .18 from last year, he said.

Omaha Lottery Goal Is Tax-Exempt Status

Omaha (AP)—U.S. Attorney Daniel Wherry said Monday Omaha's lottery will have to pay federal wagering taxes unless the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) grants tax-exempt status to the lottery corporation.

Wherry commented after meeting with officials of the city and the City Betterment Corp., which plans to launch the lottery in mid August.

Wherry said any organization that wants to avoid federal wagering taxes must make formal application to the IRS.

Officials said the City Betterment Corp. would file such an application soon.

The U.S. attorney said federal laws require any person or organization involved in a gambling enterprise or lottery must purchase a $500 tax stamp each year and pay 2% of gross receipts each month to the government in a wagering excise tax.

Beatrice State Home. . .

Suit Settlement Predicted Soon

Omaha (AP) — It appears that parties involved in the Beatrice State Home suit are in substantial agreement on the major points of contention, and that they might be near an out-of-court settlement, a source close to the case said Tuesday.

Only the specifics of the agreement need to be worked out, said the source, who asked not to be identified.

Any agreement in the suit will have to be approved by U.S. District Court Judge Albert G. Schatz, who began hearing the case Monday. There is no jury.

The plaintiffs contend that some mentally retarded persons at the Beatrice State Home are not getting adequate treatment, and that other, less-restrictive settings are available or should be made available to the patients.

The trial was recessed Monday after about 90 minutes of testimony and was to have resumed Tuesday, with Dr. Philip Roos of Arlington, Tex., on the witness stand. Roos is the executive director of the National Association for Retarded Citizens, and was the only witness to testify during Monday's session.

However, Schatz announced a delay in the court's proceedings until Wednesday morning, partly due to a speaking commitment at Creighton University.

It was learned that attorneys for both sides met all Monday afternoon with experts in the field of mental retardation, and Schatz said the lawyers would continue to work on the legal ramifications involved, and the possibility of a consent decree.

A consent decree is an agreement, which is sanctioned by the court and is binding both parties to the litigation.

During his testimony Monday, Roos said mental retardation involves difficulties in learning, judgment, problem solving and retention. It differs from mental illness, he said, and retarded persons' conditions can be improved, but the conditions generally persist.

Roos testified there are about 250 known causes for retardation but the cause is unknown in 75% of the cases. He added that about 3% of the population will be retarded at some time in their life, with about one out of 10 cases being mild.

He said the trend has been toward community programs and that institutions are "less conductive" to child rearing.

Roos testified that trends in the field point to more individualization of treatment and treating the retarded as normally as possible.

In his opening statement, State Asst. Atty. Gen. Mel Kammerlohr said the state's position doesn't differ substantially from the plaintiffs'. He said "we think the retarded should have the best care in the least restrictive environment."

Prisoner Arrested At Friend's

A state prisoner who failed to show up at his hair dressing classes in downtown Lincoln Tuesday morning was in police custody shortly after noon.

Police said they arrested Joseph Salazar Jr., 30, at a friend's apartment at 2348 O St. at about 1 p.m.

Authorities sais Salazar left a work release center at 24th and R on his bicycle at about 7 a.m.

A telephone call was placed to the beauty school where he was studying stating that he was ill and would not be at work, authorities said.

His absence came to light when he failed to appear at the Nebraska Regional Center, where he had a medical examination scheduled for 10 a.m.

Salazar had been a prisoner since 1966, serving a life sentence for second degree murder in Adams County.

Old Dixie Still Galloping At 27

A lot of horses make the glue factory long before they ever make age 27. Not so old Dixie. The proud mare is having some of her most glorious moments ever this summer as a trail mount at the Cornhusker Scout Reservation south of Humboldt. She's still frisky enough to take wrangler Leo Prokop over the hills at full gallop — which is a pretty weighty statement. The former Swanton resident hits the scales at 230. (Star Staff Photo.)

Union Local OKs Offer, But Only After Fistfight

Omaha (AP) — At least five persons were injured Monday night in a fight that erupted after a contract vote by members of Operating Engineers, Local 571.

About 215 persons attended the meeting, in which the local accepted a new contract offer from the Omaha Building Contractors Association.

Union officials said the fight involved factions for and against the proposal.

The new contract calls for an immediate wage hike of 10.9%, and was approved by a 2-1 margin, according to Orva Metzler, union business manager.

Two of the injured in the fight required medical attention.

Lawrence P. Shattuck, 58, of Omaha, was hospitalized. He was listed in satisfactory condition Tuesday.

Another Omahan, Melvin Dickman, 20, was treated at a local hospital and released.

Last week, a Douglas County District Court judge ordered the operating engineers back to work, after the contractors association and Peter Kiewit Sons' Co., filed a suit. The suit charged the union with violating a no-strike clause in its contract.

The strike, which began June 25, halted work on about 15 major projects in the Omaha-area, because members of other unions honored the picket lines set up by the operating engineers. The stoppage affected an estimated 4,000 workers.

After the court order, the engineers returned to work, but said they disagreed with the contentions that they were violating a no-strike clause in their contract.

After Monday's vote, attorneys for the contractors association and Kiewit said all legal action will be dropped.

The new pay package calls for a 98-cents-per-hour increase, retroactive to June 1. The increase will boost the union's top pay to $10.00 per hour.

The union had been seeking an immediate raise of $1.25 per hour.

Nebraska Students Speak Many Different Languages

By DICK HOLMAN
Star Staff Writer

Significant numbers of elementary school students who have limited ability in the English language are dropping out before they reach secondary school, according to Fred Rodriguez.

The Nebraska Department of Education consultant found 665 students in the state whose first language is other than English. And he told the State Board of Education there are "easily" more than 1,000 students who need special help in English.

In a Bilingual Education Task Force report the board requested Rodriquez to conduct last February, 323 school districts were surveyed. About 262 responded.

No English At All

Of the 665 students identified, 220 have no command of the English language and 445 have a minimal command. The total included 493 elementary students and 172 in secondary schools.

Thus, Rodriguez deduced that the grade-schoolers' "language problem" is a barrier to completing their high school education.

Only Class II through VI school districts were surveyed; the 900 small, rural Class I districts aren't represented. That drew objections from Lexington board member Marilyn Fowler, who said Class I students are continually underserved.

The board accepted Rodriguez' report, which stated even the preliminary data are significant enough "to justify some action" by the state to improve Nebraska schools' bilingual-bicultural programs, or start them where none exist.

Lincoln has such a program in Spanish at Park Elementary School.

Bilingual-bicultural education is a total self-development program to help students learn and reinforce their own language and culture. Simultaneously, they acquire ability to function in another language and behave in patterns of the second culture.

The board took no official action on Rodriguez' recommendations, but agreed on the need to adopt a policy and set of guidelines. Education Commissioner Anne Campbell ordered those devised for later board approval.

Rodriguez said the number of languages he found spoken in Nebraska homes is "most astonishing."

The list includes Spanish, Japanese, Indian, Asian Indian, East Indian, Iranian, Czech, Slavic, German, Swahili, Italian, Filipino, Ukranian, Norwegian, Korean, Latvian, Nigerian, Sioux, Omaha and Lakota Indian, Bohemian, Portugese, Arabic, Chinese, Persian, Greek, Polish, Twi, Vietnamese, French, Flemish, Pakistanian, Egyptian, Trukese, Pompango and Taglo.

There is some question among federal officials, Rodreiguez said, about whether the American black dialect may be considered a second language in U.S. schools.

In Region I surveyed — Lancaster and Saunders Counties — the report lists 28 students nonfunctional in English, of whom 15 spoke Spanish. Another 40 in the two counties had only minimal command of English.

In Lincoln, the survey found 646 black students, 202 Indian, 93 orientals and 282 with Spanish surnames.

Board members noted one Nebraska student, an 11th-grader, who speaks Persian but no English, and they wondered how he had advanced to high school.

Especially Refugees

Rodriguez explained the student is probably an immigrant, and Nebraska schools will have to "deal with that more and more," especially to serve Vietnamese refugees.

Mel Nielsen, foreign language consultant, reported that the Education Department will have kits available by Aug. 1 to help teachers in "English as a second language" programs. The kits are being developed specifically to serve schools which must educate more than 200 recently-arrived Vietnamese, who have either minimal or no competence in English.

Nielsen said the department is also adapting kits to serve students who have other native languages, such as Spanish.

In a related report, Glen E. Shafer, administrator for teacher certification, said the Education Department will follow existing guidelines for teacher endorsement in bilingual-bicultural education, unless they're updated by the Nebraska Council on Teacher Education.

Shafer said he has contacted all 50 states and found that "only a very few" have teacher programs leading to such an endorsement. However, in a few states, interest in promoting the concept is increasing, he said.

Chambers Asks Douglas Defend Speed Limit Law

By United Press International

Sen. Ernest Chambers of Omaha Tuesday suggested to the Unicameral's Executive Board that Atty. Gen. Paul Douglas defend the constitutionality of Nebraska's 55-mile-per-hour speed limit law before the State Supreme Court.

In a letter to Sen. Eugene Mahoney of Omaha, executive board chairman, Chambers said, "I am formally requesting that the Executive Board direct the attorney general to defend (the law) before the Nebraska Supreme Court."

Chambers also said that he is prepared to discuss the matter with the board if it wished.

The Supreme Court on July 11 agreed to accept as an original action a suit requested by Douglas in an attempt to determine the validity of the new speed limit law. Douglas, however, filed his request with the court, saying the law could not be defended constitutionally.

The issue involved in the court test is a section which Chambers had attached to the legislation.

That section provides for a maximum fine of $10 for going 10 mph over the speed limit on the interstate. The section also says that no court costs may be collected in connection with such fines and no drivers license points may be assessed.

Douglas requested the court accept the case as an original action, bypassing the normal procedure of filing in the district court and then appealing, in response to a request from Gov. J. James Exon.

Exon contended that if the law is allowed to stand as amended by Chambers, law enforcement efforts would be at best hampered if not rendered useless.

10 Omahans Named To Integration Panel

Omaha (AP) — Six whites and four blacks have been named to a court-appointed committee to help the Omaha School District formulate its comprehensive plans for the integration of its student body.

The 10-member committee was announced Tuesday by U.S. District Court Judge Albert G. Schatz.

Schatz has been ordered to oversee the district's integration efforts, which were ordered by the U.S. 8th Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis.

The Board of Education will appeal the circuit court decision to the U.S. Supreme Court, but will go ahead with integration plans in the meantime.

In selecting the committee members, Schatz said he did his own investigation, and interviewed the potential members personally.

Named to the committee were:

Dr. Raymond Shaddy of Creighton University.

William Ramsey, assistant director of development at Boys Town.

Mrs. Delia M. Bonner, a former junior high school teacher now active in the Urban League and other community activities.

Mrs. M. T. Crummer, an Omaha housewife who has been very active in community affairs involving young people.

Mrs. Mary E. Brown, a housewife who is a past president of the Omaha Council of PTAs.

Dale TeKolste of Northern Natural Gas.

Tom Norwood, assistant dean in the College of Education at the University of Nebraska at Omaha and a former Omaha school teacher.

Samuel Crawford of Creighton University, a former Omaha school teacher and administrator.

Robert Moriarty, former member of an advisory committee to the superintendent of the Omaha School District and presently employed in the personnel management division at Mutual of Omaha.

Kenneth Young, personnel manager of Control Document Corp., of Omaha, and very active in community affairs.

Three of the committee members, Mrs. Brown, Moriarty and Norwood, served on the Omaha Community Committee.

The committee spent six months last year working to devise programs to better balance the black-white ratio in the Omaha schools.

Highway Safety Chief Appalled At Slaughter

The administrator of Nebraska's highway safety program said Tuesday he is "appalled at the senseless slaughter of Nebraskans which has taken place on the roads in our state in the last four days."

"Between 6 p.m. Friday and 6 a.m. Monday morning, nine Nebraskans died on our roads," said administrator Sam Franco. "Six died over the weekend and three died early (Monday) morning."

"This type of senseless killing must stop," Franco said.

He said that he's certain if Nebraskans were to hear that nine people had been shot over the weekend "they would be shocked." Yet, Franco said, "many tend to treat roadway fatalities as commonplace, even inevitable."

He noted that last year at this time 207 people had died on Nebraska roads.

"Through Sunday night that figure stood at 178," he said, and with the three Monday the figure rose to 181.

"I wish I could say it were nine lower and the nine who died recently were here today," Franco said.

Hastings City Sales Tax Killed; Mill Levy Hiked

Hastings (UPI) — A proposed city sales tax of 1% is dead at least for one more year, but the property tax mill levy will increase four to five mills to fund the city's budget, city officials said Tuesday.

The city council and representatives of the business community met on the proposed budget and decided against implementing the sales tax at least until next year.

Officials said they will wait and see what action is taken by Grand Island and Kearney on city sales tax proposals.

A public hearing will be held on the budget Thursday night, but the city sales tax proposal will not be considered, officials said.

If the sales tax had been implemented, city officials said, the mill levy would have decreased about 10 mills.

Lightning Hits Hastings Chapel

Hastings (AP) — The All Fatihs Chapel at Good Samaritan Village, a retirement home, was struck by lightning and suffered minor damage from fire early Tuesday. Police Chief Monte Kohoe said the fire was difficult to reach due to construction of the building, but once located, it was extinguished quickly. No one was injured.

Art Group Elects Hawkins

Braasch Pleads Innocent To Murder

Hastings (AP) — A Hastings man appearing in Adams County District Court has entered an innocent plea to charges of first degree murder. Charged in connection with the March 14 shooting death of Loren J. Bolte, 35, of rural Hastings, is Terry Braasch, 27. Braasch allegedly went to the Hastings machine shop where both men were employed, and shot Bolte with a shotgun. Authorities said the two men had had a long-standing disagreement before the incident. Trial has been set for Aug. 25.

Madrid Firm Files For Bankruptcy

Omaha (AP) — General bankruptcy papers were filed in U.S. District Court in Omaha by the SLB Corp. of Perkins County, a Madrid corporation. SLB listed public entertainment as its chief business. The corporation listed claims of more than $86,000 and assets of $60. The petition said the corporation booked entertainers for performances at Horseshoe Bend Park in Madrid from last December through July 13. The petition listed Donald Steinwart as an officer of the corporation.

Revitalizing Downtown Area Eyed

Grand Island (UPI) — The Community Development Advisory Board has taken what could be the first steps in a campaign to change the deteriorating eastern face of downtown Grand Island. A crowd of 50 persons showed up at a hearing for the first public discussion of how to spend $914,000 to revitalize the downtown area. Bob Meyer of the Downtown Retail Trade Council said a civic center study should be expedited by the Bicentennial committee. He said the center might be located in the eastern downtown area on urban renewal authority land.

Terrytown Awaiting Outcome Of Lottery Suit

By JOEL THORSON
Outstate Nebraska Bureau

The tiny Panhandle community of Terrytown, the only municipality in Nebraska whose voters have authorized a municipal lottery, is awaiting the outcome of an Omaha court suit before it proceeds with a lottery of its own.

In question is the vagueness of the state lottery law, according to Terrytown village attorney Howard Olsen.

Spokesmen of other cities and towns have reacted with indifference, confusion, uncertainty and disapproval to the Omaha lottery's proposal to sell its tickets in outstate communities, with revenues being shared with each sponsoring town.

In Lincoln, both Mayor Helen Boosalis and City Council Chairman Max Denney expressed disapproval of any Lincoln involvement in a lottery. Both said they felt lotteries depend too heavily on people who can least afford to indulge in them.

Several other municipal spokesmen said the possibility of lottery revenue had not been discussed in their towns. Others, like Terrytown's Olsen, were waiting for key legal questions to be resolved.

Omaha attorney Martin Cannon has filed suit seeking a permanent injunction against the Omaha lottery. Cannon claims it is illegal because it was not authorized by public ballot and allegedly benefits private interests.

A constitutional amendment approved by state voters in 1968 enabled the Unicameral to pass legislation the next year authorizing municipalities and nonprofit associations to hold lotteries for charity and community betterment.

Unlike the proposed Terrytown lottery — which was approved by voters, 27-3 — the Omaha lottery was authorized by the City Council.

No public vote was needed, supporters say, because the lottery is being run by a nonprofit organization, with half the proceeds going to the city and half to community improvement projects.

But Terrytown's legal concerns, Olsen said, are whether the village can legally hire a consulting firm for a percentage of the proceeds and whether tickets can be sold outside the authorizing town's limits.

Since Terrytown is so small, Olsen said, it couldn't afford to operate its own lottery nor sustain one with ticket sales from its small population base.

Olsen said he is also concerned about the village's liability for any obligations that might be incurred if a lottery failed.

The Terrytown lottery would have to be run by a large national consulting firm with experience and enough funds to back up an assurance of liability for all obligations, he said.

A South Dakota lottery was scotched by the state attorney general after six weeks of operation, which "cost everybody a lot of money," Olsen said.

Even if legal questions are resolved in Terrytown's favor, he said, the village would probably start small, operating only in the Panhandle, to make sure the lottery is viable before it incurs many obligations.

Would Terrytown operate a lottery in competition with Omaha's? That would depend on the Omaha lottery's plans for the Panhandle, Olsen said.

The village attorney said he would not reject the sale of Omaha lottery tickets in Terrytown if a revenue-sharing arrangement were offered.

Lincoln's Mayor Boosalis said she is "not favorable to a lottery at this time," adding the statement applied to any Lincoln-run lottery as well as the sale of Omaha lottery tickets in Lincoln.

Australian To Study Role Of Volunteers In America

By LINDA OLIG
Star Staff Writer

Lugging a solitary suitcase and a flight bag, Margaret McGregor stepped off the plane Tuesday at Lincoln's Municipal Airport, ready to begin the third leg of a three-month tour of the United States.

Mrs. McGregor, director of a family counseling agency in Melbourne, Australia, is here to study the role of volunteers.

Her agency, Southern Family Life Services, was a pioneer in the use of volunteers in a variety of ways, she said in a gentle English accent.

The pilot study was started just five years ago. Since then, Victoria, one of Australia's states, has witnessed a "mushrooming of volunteer activity," Mrs. McGregor said.

The agency she directs uses volunteers "in every other way besides counselors."

'Parent Aides'

Volunteers even serve as "parent aides," going into homes to serve as quasi-role models for parents who have abused their children. Those volunteers complement the role of the social worker, she said.

Mrs. McGregor said she had had no problem recruiting volunteers for her program. But there is widespread "concern that we won't be able to maintain the supply" as women return to work, she said. Housewives make up 90% of the volunteer force in Victoria, compared to approximately 20% here.

A member of the Victorian Council of Social Service, Mrs. McGregor took it upon herself to study volunteer roles. She continues to receive her regular salary during the three-month tour, but is footing the rest of her travel expenses.

She said she chose this country for her volunteer study because, based on extensive reading, "America is the country where volunteers are used most extensively."

The state council has received a national grant to establish a resource center similar to the Lincoln Volunteer Bureau for recruitment and placement of volunteers. Mrs. McGregor hopes to eventually get into the job of coordinating volunteers.

Colorado Agencies

She already has visited voluntary agencies in Boulder and Denver, Colo.

Her preliminary assessment shows that social agencies here are "more management oriented" and "use youth more."

In addition, "Your programs are very carefully planned and evaluated," Mrs. McGregor said. "Ours wouldn't be as planned and evaluated as regularly."

She sees advantages and disadvantages both ways.

"We need to do a lot more" planning and evaluating, she said.

Saying she is reluctant to make an "assessment after a fortnight in America," she said evaluation is sometimes "a luxury" that, if foregone, allows for the performance of more services "in a practical way."

She'll reserve her final assessment until her three months are up.

Lincoln, Omaha Groups

While in Lincoln, Mrs. McGregor plans to visit Planned Parenthood, the Retired Senior Volunteer Program, Senior Diners, Lincoln Information Service for the Elderly, Lincoln-Lancaster Mental Health Center, Open Door Health Center, Personal Crisis Service and the Volunteer Bureau. A handful of other agencies are listed on her itinerary, plus a side trip to Omaha agencies.

Come Tuesday, she will pack her suitcase and head off for tours of voluntary agencies in America from Seattle to Louisville, Los Angeles to New York.

New Alcoholism Chief Sets Priorities

By BOB GUENTHER
Star Staff Writer

Dr. Bill Ford, the state's new alcoholism director, has set the decriminalization of public drunkenness as one of his priorities.

Ford, clinical psychologist with the State Department of Public Institutions since 1971, was appointed to the post Tuesday by Acting Director Jack Cleavenger, succeeding John North who resigned in January.

A native of Pennsylvania, Ford said he hopes the Legislature and the governor see fit to enact a law decriminalizing public intoxication and setting treatment centers around the state.

Such a bill was passed by the 1975 Legislature. However, Gov. J. James Exon vetoed the bill after the Legislature had adjourned.

That bill would have increased taxes on liquor and beer to pay for the treatment centers. Ford said he felt the funding scheme was "reasonable." Such a treatment system, in which drunks are taken to centers for treatment, instead of jail, would cost $1.5 million to operate during the first year.

St. Louis has operated such a system, Ford said, with "a fair amount of success."

Asked about his philosophy on alcoholics, Ford responded, "I believe for all individuals in personal responsibility for behavior.

"The notion that alcoholism is a disease is confusing to most people. I believe that an alcoholic is more than just a person with weak moral fiber," he said.

His first priority, however, will be to get the alcoholism's "administrative house in order so that funds are spent more efficiently."

Currently, he said the alcoholism program has not achieved the degree of community control he would like.

"In some ways, we've been too centralized," he said.

The state, which annually disperses $375,000 in federal grants, will set the priorities for community mental health regions while the local boards will determine how to distribute the money.

Ford said he plans to explore other means of funding for alcoholism projects. The present level of funding is "not at all adequate," he said.

Ford, 30, earned his bachelors degree at the University of Pittsburgh and his masters and Ph.D. at the University of Massachusetts. Prior to coming to Nebraska, he worked for one and one-half years in alcoholism in the Veterans Administration Hospital at North Hampton, Mass.

Hospital Official Faces Charges In Alleged Rape

Omaha (UPI) — A supervisor at the Veterans Hospital in Omaha was arrested Tuesday for the alleged rape of a hospital employe.

U.S. Atty. Daniel Wherry said Howard Taylor, 42, Omaha, appeared before U.S. Magistrate Richard C. Peck and bond was set at $5,000.

Taylor, a supervisor in the hospital's dietetic services department, was charged with "rape on a federal reservation" in connection with a June 28 incident involving a 20-year-old female hospital employe.

Wherry said Taylor was remanded back to the Douglas County Jail in lieu of 10% of the bond. After informing Taylor of his rights, Peck set July 24 as the next court date pending the procurement of legal counsel by Taylor.

It's Banner Day For Scottsbluff Maternity Ward

Scottsbluff (AP) — It was a banner day for birthday's at the Western Nebraska General Hospital Tuesday.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. Michael Coen of Scottsbluff was a baby boy weighing 7 pounds, 4 ounces.

Coincidently, the attending physician, Dr. Kenneth Johnson and the attending anesthetist, Dale Stotts, both of Scottsbluff, were also celebrating their birthdays.

'Street Art' Rare In Lincoln

By CYNTHIA JOHNSON
Star Staff Writer

Robert Sommer would be bored to death in Lincoln.

A connoisseur of "street art" (outdoor art done by professional or amateur artists), Sommer has traveled across the country searching out and photographing art in the streets.

And what he has found on a large scale in other cities, does not exist — or is extremely well-hidden — in Lincoln.

That is not to say that Lincoln is totally devoid of street art.

A trip through the city reveals that there is a good deal of what Sommer — in a book entitled "Street Art" — terms "naive art." Private mailboxes embellished with decoration fits this category, which is defined as art "created by nonprofessionals according to individual inclination to be displayed in their own spaces."

Professional art, which is "art legally introduced into a public space," is also fairly easy to find in Lincoln. The mural on Pershing Auditorium, pieces displayed in the Sheldon Art Gallery sculpture garden, the buffalo statue found in Pioneers Park are all examples of this type of street art.

On the other hand, Lincoln has few examples of "people's art" (anonymous art in a public space), graffiti and murals painted on houses, buildings and walls.

It is this latter form of street art — outdoor mural painting — that Sommer has been primarily concerned with in his search for street art.

According to Sommer, there has been an "explosion" in outdoor mural painting in other American cities during recent years.

Murals painted on walls and buildings — frequently in neighborhoods dominated by non-white ethnic groups — "are a way of bringing art to people who are otherwise denied access to it," Sommer says.

"The new mural movement did not begin as a Washington program that filtered down to the states, cities and neighborhoods. The main impetus for these murals has been at the local level rather than coming from above."

Usually reflecting an ethnic theme, the murals are painted by professionals, amateurs and, sometimes, groups of artists who work with community people.

The apparent lack of this type of street art in Lincoln is due in part to the absence of "a strong ethnic identity" here, according to Dr. Jack Siegman, associate professor of sociology at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

Siegman — a specialist in urban sociology and ethnic, national and racial minorities — said that, in order for such art to appear, "there has to be an isolation of an ethnic population from other populations within the city."

This kind of art "usually implies not only a pride in the population you identify with, but also the possibility of a negative orientation toward other populations," he said.

In cities such as Lincoln, where the non-white population is small, the possibility that a strong ethnic identity will exist is not very great, Siegman said.

There is "greater ethnic assimilation," more pressure to abandon a heritage "different from the mainstream" in smaller cities.

A relatively recent phenomenon, whereby city governments or business associations have sponsored the creation of ethnic street art, was described by Siegman as "a way in which city bureaus recognize the existence of ethnic areas as a positive force in the community.

"What it reflects is an enlarged pluralism; (a belief that) we can be composed of diverse populations, each having its own characteristics and proud of them."

Opening lead — king of hearts.

Normally, the expert does extremely well and makes the most of his cards, but there are hands where his imagination leads him into labyrinthian paths and he gets completely lost. Occasionally, the expert actually goes down on a hand which your Aunt Tillie — who doesn't play very well — would have made.

Consider this deal where South got to six diamonds. It is certainly easy to make the slam, especially if you see all four hands, but our hero somehow got off the track and wound up ignominiously going down one.

West led a heart, which declarer ruffed. He then played the ace of trumps, East showing out, and it was this unexpected development that sent South's mind racing towards the implications suggested by the 3-0 trump division.

He assumed that West had five hearts for his overcall, as well as exactly three diamonds. He also assumed that West had either three or four spades — for if West had only a doubleton, East would have seven spades, which was highly unlikely on the bidding.

But if West had four spades, thought South, he would have a singleton club, and, pursuing this possibility, declarer drew two more rounds of trumps and played a club from dummy to the queen.

West took the king and played another heart. South ruffed, led a spade to the king, returned a club and — horror of horrors — finessed the ten to guard against the chance that East had started with four clubs to the jack.

So South went down one, due to his hyperthyroid imagination, on a hand where Aunt Tillie would have made the slam without giving the matter a second thought. There are times when simplest is best and too much knowledge of the game does more harm than good.

She Doesn't Want To Embarrass Her Escort

DEAR ABBY: I am a widow, past 65, but I still enjoy dining out, and going to movies and the theater.

My hairdresser is wonderful company, and we frequently go places together. (He's gay.) Of course, I pick up the checks, which, I suppose, makes my friend feel uncomfortable. But I can't see myself letting him pay and then trying to settle up with him afterward. (He may not have that much cash on him.)

Is there some way to handle the money matters without embarrassing him?

ANONYMOUS, PLEASE

DEAR ANON: If you frequent the same restaurants often, arrange with the management to bill you by the month, including a percentage for the tips.

Or before the evening's outing, give your escort enough cash to cover everything, and at the end of the evening he can return the change.

DEAR ABBY: I read in the paper that the Catholic church claims 48,701,835 members. Although I am now an atheist, I was baptized and confirmed a Catholic, so today I am still counted as a member of their census.

How can I make that number 48,701,834? I would like to excommunicate myself — or sign out of the Catholic church.

If you know of any way I can do this, please let me know.

C.J.F.

DEAR C.J.F.: I am informed that there is no way to "unbaptize" yourself. You can drop out of the church, of course, but you can't have your name removed from the baptismal records because it is a legal document.

DEAR ABBY: I feel sorry for "MCP in Newport Beach" whose father badly needed a kidney transplant. The problem is not really a scarcity of willing donors but, rather, specialization. The individual societies (kidney, bone, eye, etc.) make it so difficult to donate because they require you to donate their part individually. Each society has its own empire, and you simply cannot donate your entire body to one organization to split it up for whoever needs it.

A few years ago, my wife and I made strenuous efforts all over this city (the second largest in the country) to find any organization (medical schools, hospitals, kidney and other societies) that would accept our bodies after death, take over the entire responsibility for distributing needs parts, then bury what was left. There is simply no such central group.

If these various organizations really wanted donors, all they would have to do is get together and form a cooperative group that would take full responsibility for distribution and disposal (without cost to the donor). If they did that, they would all have more donors than they could handle.

Sign me: "ALL OR NOTHING AT ALL" IN LOS ANGELES (or perhaps: "WHY NOT TAKE ALL OF ME")

DEAR ABBY: This is for "Trapped," the young woman whose husband beat her and kept her a prisoner in her home with no money of her own. You told her to go to a family service agency for help. How could she get there? She doesn't drive.

My husband also kept me a prisoner, and I didn't drive. He never allowed me to have any friends, never gave me a penny for anything and wouldn't even let me go to church. He'd hit me when I complained.

When I threatened divorce, he said nobody else would have me. I had two children and no training for a job, so I put up with it for six years.

I finally started to talk with my minister on the phone. He told me that God didn't intend for marriage to be a test of anybody's endurance. He advised me to give my husband a time limit to seek help, and if he refused, to leave him with no regrets.

I took my minister's advice. My husband laughed in my face, told me no other man would have me and slapped me and the children around. Finally, I left.

I stayed with my parents for six months while I found a job and a place of my own. For two years I lived alone and found that I had an inner strength and a faith in God I didn't know was there.

I joined "Parents Without Partners" and dated when I could. I stayed with the church and sang in the choir. Then, one night at choir rehearsal a young man who had recently returned from the military service walked in. I soon found out he was single.

To make a long story short, we have been married three years and now have a child of our own. I couldn't be happier.

Please print this, Abby. If it gives just one woman the courage to gather up her self-respect and leave a situation that's as hopeless as mine was, it will be worth it.

Collecting Miniatures Fast-Growing Hobby

By United Press International

Hobbyists who make or collect miniatures are increasing so fast that a national organization formed in 1972 says it's getting about 100 requests a day for membership.

Miniatures as a category covers everything from dolls to houses, generally one-inch to one-foot scale, or smaller.

"Just about everything that's made, someone is making in miniature," says Vicki Newhouse of Huntington Beach, Calif. Mrs. Newhouse is treasurer of the National Association of Miniature Enthusiasts in nearby Anaheim.

NAME's members are adult collectors of miniature antiques, houses and furniture, or artisans who make the pieces.

"In the last two years," Mrs. Newhouse said, "growth in miniatures has been phenomenal. Miniatures are affordable to everyone.

"What's nice about it is it's more of a family hobby. Many husbands are getting into the architectural part of it, designing houses and settings for the pieces their wives make or collect."

Mrs. Newhouse said the boom stems from current economic problems.

"When families go even to the local theaters, it's $3 a seat, plus popcorn and babysitter. It's getting expensive. Also more leisure time has a big effect," she said.

"Also, with the fuel shortage we won't be driving and camping as much. This is affordable and available to everyone, or every age."

She said she frequently hears from people in towns she does not recognize who want to become involved by mail, if not in any other way.

Mrs. Newhouse herself collects and creates miniatures. Her specialty is making dollhouse dolls that are replicas of people. The dolls range in height from one to six inches.

Dozens of smaller groups in southern California also are involved in miniatures. Many stage shows, sales and fairs.

NAME's 10 regional directors do the same.

Mrs. Newhouse said that NAME publishes a quarterly, "Miniature Gazette," and has scheduled a national convention for Aug. 11-12 in Milwaukee. It will include speakers, slide shows, workshops and sales.

Mrs. Betty Allen of the Gardena (Calif.) Miniature Guild, which was organized in 1967, said only in the past couple of years have collectors been able to buy what they want.

Now many shops around the country sell miniatures.

Mrs. Allen said many clubs and groups organized because they couldn't find what they wanted, so they got together to make miniature objects.

"We always said we were the first to recycle things," Mrs. Allen said. "We don't throw anything away. Bristles of a toothbrush end up as a miniature broom. The little liners inside the caps of some no-deposit bottles make dandy dinner plates."

Australian To Study Role Of Volunteers In America

By LINDA OLIG
Star Staff Writer

Lugging a solitary suitcase and a flight bag, Margaret McGregor stepped off the plane Tuesday at Lincoln's Municipal Airport, ready to begin the third leg of a three-month tour of the United States.

Mrs. McGregor, director of a family counseling agency in Melbourne, Australia, is here to study the role of volunteers.

Her agency, Southern Family Life Services, was a pioneer in the use of volunteers in a variety of ways, she said in a gentle English accent.

The pilot study was started just five years ago. Since then, Victoria, one of Australia's states, has witnessed a "mushrooming of volunteer activity," Mrs. McGregor said.

The agency she directs uses volunteers "in every other way besides counselors."

'Parent Aides'

Volunteers even serve as "parent aides," going into homes to serve as quasi-role models for parents who have abused their children. Those volunteers complement the role of the social worker, she said.

Mrs. McGregor said she had had no problem recruiting volunteers for her program. But there is widespread "concern that we won't be able to maintain the supply" as women return to work, she said. Housewives make up 90% of the volunteer force in Victoria, compared to approximately 20% here.

A member of the Victorian Council of Social Service, Mrs. McGregor took it upon herself to study volunteer roles. She continues to receive her regular salary during the three-month tour, but is footing the rest of her travel expenses.

She said she chose this country for her volunteer study because, based on extensive reading, "America is the country where volunteers are used most extensively."

The state council has received a national grant to establish a resource center similar to the Lincoln Volunteer Bureau for recruitment and placement of volunteers. Mrs. McGregor hopes to eventually get into the job of coordinating volunteers.

Colorado Agencies

She already has visited voluntary agencies in Boulder and Denver, Colo.

Her preliminary assessment shows that social agencies here are "more management oriented" and "use youth more."

In addition, "Your programs are very carefully planned and evaluated," Mrs. McGregor said. "Ours wouldn't be as planned and evaluated as regularly."

She sees advantages and disadvantages both ways.

"We need to do a lot more" planning and evaluating, she said.

Saying she is reluctant to make an "assessment after a fortnight in America," she said evaluation is sometimes "a luxury" that, if foregone, allows for the performance of more services "in a practical way."

She'll reserve her final assessment until her three months are up.

Lincoln, Omaha Groups

While in Lincoln, Mrs. McGregor plans to visit Planned Parenthood, the Retired Senior Volunteer Program, Senior Diners, Lincoln Information Service for the Elderly, Lincoln-Lancaster Mental Health Center, Open Door Health Center, Personal Crisis Service and the Volunteer Bureau. A handful of other agencies are listed on her itinerary, plus a side trip to Omaha agencies.

Come Tuesday, she will pack her suitcase and head off for tours of voluntary agencies in America from Seattle to Louisville, Los Angeles to New York.

New Alcoholism Chief Sets Priorities

By BOB GUENTHER
Star Staff Writer

Dr. Bill Ford, the state's new alcoholism director, has set the decriminalization of public drunkenness as one of his priorities.

Ford, clinical psychologist with the State Department of Public Institutions since 1971, was appointed to the post Tuesday by Acting Director Jack Cleavenger, succeeding John North who resigned in January.

A native of Pennsylvania, Ford said he hopes the Legislature and the governor see fit to enact a law decriminalizing public intoxication and setting treatment centers around the state.

Such a bill was passed by the 1975 Legislature. However, Gov. J. James Exon vetoed the bill after the Legislature had adjourned.

That bill would have increased taxes on liquor and beer to pay for the treatment centers. Ford said he felt the funding scheme was "reasonable." Such a treatment system, in which drunks are taken to centers for treatment, instead of jail, would cost $1.5 million to operate during the first year.

St. Louis has operated such a system, Ford said, with "a fair amount of success."

Asked about his philosophy on alcoholics, Ford responded, "I believe for all individuals in personal responsibility for behavior.

"The notion that alcoholism is a disease is confusing to most people. I believe that an alcoholic is more than just a person with weak moral fiber," he said.

His first priority, however, will be to get the alcoholism's "administrative house in order so that funds are spent more efficiently."

Currently, he said the alcoholism program has not achieved the degree of community control he would like.

"In some ways, we've been too centralized," he said.

The state, which annually disperses $375,000 in federal grants, will set the priorities for community mental health regions while the local boards will determine how to distribute the money.

Ford said he plans to explore other means of funding for alcoholism projects. The present level of funding is "not at all adequate," he said.

Ford, 30, earned his bachelors degree at the University of Pittsburgh and his masters and Ph.D. at the University of Massachusetts. Prior to coming to Nebraska, he worked for one and one-half years in alcoholism in the Veterans Administration Hospital at North Hampton, Mass.

Hospital Official Faces Charges In Alleged Rape

Omaha (UPI) — A supervisor at the Veterans Hospital in Omaha was arrested Tuesday for the alleged rape of a hospital employe.

U.S. Atty. Daniel Wherry said Howard Taylor, 42, Omaha, appeared before U.S. Magistrate Richard C. Peck and bond was set at $5,000.

Taylor, a supervisor in the hospital's dietetic services department, was charged with "rape on a federal reservation" in connection with a June 28 incident involving a 20-year-old female hospital employe.

Wherry said Taylor was remanded back to the Douglas County Jail in lieu of 10% of the bond. After informing Taylor of his rights, Peck set July 24 as the next court date pending the procurement of legal counsel by Taylor.

It's Banner Day For Scottsbluff Maternity Ward

Scottsbluff (AP) — It was a banner day for birthday's at the Western Nebraska General Hospital Tuesday.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. Michael Coen of Scottsbluff was a baby boy weighing 7 pounds, 4 ounces.

Coincidently, the attending physician, Dr. Kenneth Johnson and the attending anesthetist, Dale Stotts, both of Scottsbluff, were also celebrating their birthdays.

Northern Natural Gas Drops Storage Plans

Des Moines (UPI) — Northern Natural Gas Co. announced here it has abandoned plans to establish an underground natural gas storage facility near Dallas Center and Adel.

The utility said an extensive geologic investigation had revealed the land structure is faulted through the deeper geologic formations.

'Street Art' Rare In Lincoln

By CYNTHIA JOHNSON
Star Staff Writer

Robert Sommer would be bored to death in Lincoln.

A connoisseur of "street art" (outdoor art done by professional or amateur artists), Sommer has traveled across the country searching out and photographing art in the streets.

And what he has found on a large scale in other cities, does not exist — or is extremely well-hidden — in Lincoln.

That is not to say that Lincoln is totally devoid of street art.

A trip through the city reveals that there is a good deal of what Sommer — in a book entitled "Street Art" — terms "naive art." Private mailboxes embellished with decoration fits this category, which is defined as art "created by nonprofessionals according to individual inclination to be displayed in their own spaces."

Professional art, which is "art legally introduced into a public space," is also fairly easy to find in Lincoln. The mural on Pershing Auditorium, pieces displayed in the Sheldon Art Gallery sculpture garden, the buffalo statue found in Pioneers Park are all examples of this type of street art.

On the other hand, Lincoln has few examples of "people's art" (anonymous art in a public space), graffiti and murals painted on houses, buildings and walls.

It is this latter form of street art — outdoor mural painting — that Sommer has been primarily concerned with in his search for street art.

According to Sommer, there has been an "explosion" in outdoor mural painting in other American cities during recent years.

Murals painted on walls and buildings — frequently in neighborhoods dominated by non-white ethnic groups — "are a way of bringing art to people who are otherwise denied access to it," Sommer says.

"The new mural movement did not begin as a Washington program that filtered down to the states, cities and neighborhoods. The main impetus for these murals has been at the local level rather than coming from above."

Usually reflecting an ethnic theme, the murals are painted by professionals, amateurs and, sometimes, groups of artists who work with community people.

The apparent lack of this type of street art in Lincoln is due in part to the absence of "a strong ethnic identity" here, according to Dr. Jack Siegman, associate professor of sociology at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

Siegman — a specialist in urban sociology and ethnic, national and racial minorities — said that, in order for such art to appear, "there has to be an isolation of an ethnic population from other populations within the city."

This kind of art "usually implies not only a pride in the population you identify with, but also the possibility of a negative orientation toward other populations," he said.

In cities such as Lincoln, where the non-white population is small, the possibility that a strong ethnic identity will exist is not very great, Siegman said.

There is "greater ethnic assimilation," more pressure to abandon a heritage "different from the mainstream" in smaller cities.

A relatively recent phenomenon, whereby city governments or business associations have sponsored the creation of ethnic street art, was described by Siegman as "a way in which city bureaus recognize the existence of ethnic areas as a positive force in the community.

"What it reflects is an enlarged pluralism; (a belief that) we can be composed of diverse populations, each having its own characteristics and proud of them."

The bidding:

East	South	West	North
Pass	1♦	1♥	3♦
3♥	6♦

Opening lead — king of hearts.

Normally, the expert does extremely well and makes the most of his cards, but there are hands where his imagination leads him into labyrinthian paths and he gets completely lost. Occasionally, the expert actually goes down on a hand which your Aunt Tillie — who doesn't play very well — would have made.

Consider this deal where South got to six diamonds. It is certainly easy to make the slam, especially if you see all four hands, but our hero somehow got off the track and wound up ignominiously going down one.

West led a heart, which declarer ruffed. He then played the ace of trumps, East showing out, and it was this unexpected development that sent South's mind racing towards the implications suggested by the 3-0 trump division.

He assumed that West had five hearts for his overcall, as well as exactly three diamonds. He also assumed that West had either three or four spades — for if West had only a doubleton, East would have seven spades, which was highly unlikely on the bidding.

But if West had four spades, thought South, he would have a singleton club, and, pursuing this possibility, declarer drew two more rounds of trumps and played a club from dummy to the queen.

West took the king and played another heart. South ruffed, led a spade to the king, returned a club and — horror of horrors — finessed the ten to guard against the chance that East had started with four clubs to the jack.

So South went down one, due to his hyperthyroid imagination, on a hand where Aunt Tillie would have made the slam without giving the matter a second thought. There are times when simplest is best and too much knowledge of the game does more harm than good.

She Doesn't Want To Embarrass Her Escort

DEAR ABBY: I am a widow, past 65, but I still enjoy dining out, and going to movies and the theater.

My hairdresser is wonderful company, and we frequently go places together. (He's gay.) Of course, I pick up the checks, which, I suppose, makes my friend feel uncomfortable. But I can't see myself letting him pay and then trying to settle up with him afterward. (He may not have that much cash on him.)

Is there some way to handle the money matters without embarrassing him?

ANONYMOUS, PLEASE

DEAR ANON: If you frequent the same restaurants often, arrange with the management to bill you by the month, including a percentage for the tips.

Or before the evening's outing, give your escort enough cash to cover everything, and at the end of the evening he can return the change.

DEAR ABBY: I read in the paper that the Catholic church claims 48,701,835 members. Although I am now an atheist, I was baptized and confirmed a Catholic, so today I am still counted as a member of their census.

How can I make that number 48,701,834? I would like to excommunicate myself — or sign out of the Catholic church.

If you know of any way I can do this, please let me know.

C.J.F.

DEAR C.J.F.: I am informed that there is no way to "unbaptize" yourself. You can drop out of the church, of course, but you can't have your name removed from the baptismal records because it is a legal document.

DEAR ABBY: I feel sorry for "MCP in Newport Beach" whose father badly needed a kidney transplant. The problem is not really a scarcity of willing donors but, rather, specialization. The individual societies (kidney, bone, eye, etc.) make it so difficult to donate because they require you to donate their part individually. Each society has its own empire, and you simply cannot donate your entire body to one organization to split it up for whoever needs it.

A few years ago, my wife and I made strenuous efforts all over this city (the second largest in the country) to find any organization (medical schools, hospitals, kidney and other societies) that would accept our bodies after death, take over the entire responsibility for distributing needs parts, then bury what was left. There is simply no such central group.

If these various organizations really wanted donors, all they would have to do is get together and form a cooperative group that would take full responsibility for distribution and disposal (without cost to the donor). If they did that, they would all have more donors than they could handle.

Sign me: "ALL OR NOTHING AT ALL" IN LOS ANGELES (or perhaps: "WHY NOT TAKE ALL OF ME")

DEAR ABBY: This is for "Trapped," the young woman whose husband beat her and kept her a prisoner in her home with no money of her own. You told her to go to a family service agency for help. How could she get there? She doesn't drive.

My husband also kept me a prisoner, and I didn't drive. He never allowed me to have any friends, never gave me a penny for anything and wouldn't even let me go to church. He'd hit me when I complained.

When I threatened divorce, he said nobody else would have me. I had two children and no training for a job, so I put up with it for six years.

I finally started to talk with my minister on the phone. He told me that God didn't intend for marriage to be a test of anybody's endurance. He advised me to give my husband a time limit to seek help, and if he refused, to leave him with no regrets.

I took my minister's advice. My husband laughed in my face, told me no other man would have me and slapped me and the children around. Finally, I left.

I stayed with my parents for six months while I found a job and a place of my own. For two years I lived alone and found that I had an inner strength and a faith in God I didn't know was there.

I joined "Parents Without Partners" and dated when I could. I stayed with the church and sang in the choir. Then, one night at choir rehearsal a young man who had recently returned from the military service walked in. I soon found out he was single.

To make a long story short, we have been married three years and now have a child of our own. I couldn't be happier.

Please print this, Abby. If it gives just one woman the courage to gather up her self-respect and leave a situation that's as hopeless as mine was, it will be worth it.

Collecting Miniatures Fast-Growing Hobby

By United Press International

Hobbyists who make or collect miniatures are increasing so fast that a national organization formed in 1972 says it's getting about 100 requests a day for membership.

Miniatures as a category covers everything from dolls to houses, generally one-inch to one-foot scale, or smaller.

"Just about everything that's made, someone is making in miniature," says Vicki Newhouse of Huntington Beach, Calif. Mrs. Newhouse is treasurer of the National Association of Miniature Enthusiasts in nearby Anaheim.

NAME's members are adult collectors of miniature antiques, houses and furniture, or artisans who make the pieces.

"In the last two years," Mrs. Newhouse said, "growth in miniatures has been phenomenal. Miniatures are affordable to everyone.

"What's nice about it is it's more of a family hobby. Many husbands are getting into the architectural part of it, designing houses and settings for the pieces their wives make or collect."

Mrs. Newhouse said the boom stems from current economic problems.

"When families go even to the local theaters, it's $3 a seat, plus popcorn and babysitter. It's getting expensive. Also more leisure time has a big effect," she said.

"Also, with the fuel shortage we won't be driving and camping as much. This is affordable and available to everyone, or every age."

She said she frequently hears from people in towns she does not recognize who want to become involved by mail, if not in any other way.

Mrs. Newhouse herself collects and creates miniatures. Her specialty is making dollhouse dolls that are replicas of people. The dolls range in height from one to six inches.

Dozens of smaller groups in southern California also are involved in miniatures. Many stage shows, sales and fairs.

NAME's 10 regional directors do the same.

Mrs. Newhouse said that NAME publishes a quarterly, "Miniature Gazette," and has scheduled a national convention for Aug. 11-12 in Milwaukee. It will include speakers, slide shows, workshops and sales.

Mrs. Betty Allen of the Gardena (Calif.) Miniature Guild, which was organized in 1967, said only in the past couple of years have collectors been able to buy what they want.

Now many shops around the country sell miniatures.

Mrs. Allen said many clubs and groups organized because they couldn't find what they wanted, so they got together to make miniature objects.

"We always said we were the first to recycle things," Mrs. Allen said. "We don't throw anything away. Bristles of a toothbrush end up as a miniature broom. The little liners inside the caps of some no-deposit bottles make dandy dinner plates."

FBI Checks Proposed For Handgun Buyers

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Ford administration Tuesday proposed FBI checks on persons who want to buy handguns and mandatory jail sentences for those who commit a crime with a dangerous weapons.

The proposals were contained in an outline given the Senate juvenile deliquency subcommittee by Atty. Gen. Edward H. Levi. He said the administration's gun control bill soon would be submitted to Congress.

Levi said the proposal does not contain a regionally triggered ban on the sale or possession of weapons as he had suggested during his confirmation hearings nor a national gun registration provision.

Instead, the bill would authorize 500 more treasury agents to combat the gun black market in 10 large metropolitan areas where "the problem of handgun violence has reached crisis proportions," Levi said. He did not list the 10 areas.

The bill also would eliminate "Saturday Night Specials" which Levi described as being "cheap, highly concealable, inaccurate, and inherently dangerous both to the possessor and to the citizenry at large."

The bill would ban importation and domestic manufacture, assembly and sale of the "Saturday Night Specials."

Levi said the administration also wants to require handguns to have a manually operated safety and combined length and height of at least 10 inches. The height would have to be at least four inches and the length at least six inches under the proposal, he said.

Revolvers also would have to pass a safety test to assure that they will not fire if dropped plus have at least a four-inch barrel and four-inch frame.

Meanwhile, FBI Director Clarence M. Kelley announced he is assigning two FBI agents to each of four cities in what he called a new assault on crime.

The program, announced after new FBI statistics showed an 18 per cent surge in the nation's crime rate, is designed to provide FBI assistance to local police efforts to enlist citizens in the fight against crime.

The areas were identified as Wilmington, Del.; Birmingham, Ala.; Norfolk, Va., and DeKalb County, Ga., which includes part of Atlanta.

Levi told the subcommittee that the administration's gun control bill also would tighten up the purchasing process by requiring gun buyers to wait for 14 days before accepting delivery. The delay would give the dealer time to run a check through the local police, who would run an FBI name check, on the potential buyer.

The proposal also would ban the sale of two or more handguns to an invididual within one month and also would tighten requirements to become a licensed gun dealer.

In addition, it would change the criminal code by imposing a mandatory sentence on persons convicted of using a dangerous weapon, including a handgun, in committing a crime.

Justice Department officials said later there has been no final decision on the 10 cities where the Treasury force would be beefed up.

Administration officials are studying whether to make it the 10 largest cities, the 10 largest metropolitan areas, or possibly certain cities with particularly high incidences of gun crimes. It may turn out to be 10 cities or it might be a few more or less, department officials said.

County Accepts Jail Rates Hike

"You're the poorest horse traders I've ever seen in my life," Lancaster County Board member Bob Colin told his two fellow commissioners.

Then, forcing a rueful grin, in what he said was the interest of unanimity, Colin voted with Jan Gauger and Bruce Hamilton to raise the amount the county pays the city to house its prisoners.

The old rate was $3.50. The near rate is $5.53 per day, plus about 57 cents for each meal a prisoner eats.

Some Don't Eat

The board chose that over a flat rate of $7.23 per day without separate charges for meals. The board agreed that it would be cheaper to pay for meals as some prisoners do not stay long enough to eat.

Colin, however, tried to hold out for a lower flat rate. "I've never seen a time when the city didn't get the better end of the deal," he told Gauger and Hamilton.

In other action on a slim agenda, the board set a public hearing on a request for a license to sell off-sale beer at Inland Shores Marina at Branched Oak Lake.

The State Game Commission has already held a public hearing on the issue and voted 5-2 to approve the application.

"Your public hearing is more important," Deputy Lancaster County Atty. Michael Heavican told board members when they asked why another hearing was necessary. The board is the local governing unit, he said.

The board also voted to support an application from the Community Health Care Association to apply for $125,000 to plan a health maintenance organization.

Federal Money

Alex Slabosky told the board that federal money from the Department of Health, Education and Welfare would be sought. He said local matching money is coming from Blue Cross and Bankers Life of Nebraska.

The board also selected a high bid of $6,191 from J.C. Penney to install drapes in the new Lancaster Manor south wing.

Lancaster Manor Administrator Jerry Gibson said that Penney's was the only firm that actually surveyed the new wing. A bid of $6,871 was submitted by Brandeis and a bid of $5,529 came from National Custom Interiors.

Ramblers Chief Dies

Beaver Dam, Wis. (UPI) — The vice president of Holiday Ramblers, Darrell Wilson, 49, of Nappanee, Ind., died of a heart attack Monday at the organization's national rally. The rally opened at the Dodge County Fairgrounds here.

Musical Shakespearean Play 'Light'

By BILL WALLIS

A light, entertaining evening of theater awaits those who will attend David Bell and Lis Lewis's musical adaptation of William Shakespeare's "All's Well That Ends Well," the UNL Repertory Theatre's third offering of the summer.

The show contains a good deal of light, charming music, written by Ms. Lewis and orchestrated by Alan Nielsen, delightful ballet sequences choreographed by Karen McWilliams and Bell eclectic, colorful costuming by Jo McGlone, two-dimensional scenic delights designed by Nancy Myers and Jerry Lewis's superb lighting.

The single word that sums up the evening is entertaining, and this is not always for the best. The production is also monolevel, and while the end product of this adaptation will probably appeal to many who would not otherwise have been attracted to it, those who might have come for the deeper integrities of Shakespeare's work will not be satisfied with some aspects of the production.

But if the theatre ever stops being a forum for new ideas, it is lost. This is a experiment, and a good one. The play is not Shakespeare's best work, and perhaps justifies some experimentation.

How does the experiment work? First, Shakespeare's language has been neglected. It is his glory and one of the chief glories of Western art. Of the actors on stage perhaps three or four deal with their spoken art with clarity and some depth.

Although the challenges of her character are less, Connie McCord worked beautifully as Diana. Her presentation in the final scene was one of the highlights of the second act.

Diana is at this point in league with the virtuous Helena, who is successfully portrayed by a miscast Susan Baer. Helena has been spurned and deserted by her husband of several hours. Together the two conspire to help womankind make a careless and ignorant youth a responsible member of society. They succeed, magically.

The lad's name is Bertrand, and he is son to a countess, played with elegance and coherence, but with too much broadness by Cindy Wallis. Only in her scenes with Lavatch, the lascivious, delightful clown, does the countess come fully to life. Lavatch is played with fine timing and stage sense by Mitch Tebo. Tebo's skill allowed him to catch more subtleties of character than any other actor.

Bertrand is portrayed by Greg Schaffert with liveliness and engaging qualities, but he does not have the verbal skills to complement his energies yet. Doug Brissey misplays the king of France early in the show by making him a buffoon, but his later scenes are a delightful mixture of dignity and wry humor.

Jerry Homan's portrayal of Parolles is one of the highlights of the show. He is delightful. His performance is somewhat marred by what plagues many actors in the show an overliteralness of gesture, which results from shallow line interpretation. In many cases action has replaced meaning. Jann Simpson's widow did not suffer from this characteristic, and was engaging.

There are minor points of brilliance in the production. George Hanson's mildly-foppish duke, the engaging but unintegrated prologue to Act I, and the delightful ballet introducing the second act. This is magic imposed on the magic of Shakespeare, and welcome.

This play is based on a folk tale, reshaped freely by the greatest playwright of the English tongue. The lively ensemble of this production helps maintain the magic Boccaccio intended in the telling.

LHS Graduate Receives $3,000 Art Scholarship

A $3,000 scholarship to the Kansas City Art Institute in Missouri is painting a brighter art career for 1974 Lincoln High School graduate Jon Roth.

Roth, 19, who says his main art interest is in design, will attend classes in the fall at the nationally known institute, a member of the Union of Independent Colleges in Art. About 500 students attend the four-year institute, according to Roth.

Most of Roth's work has been silkscreen designs, some of which are carried on T-shirts sold by Sirk Enterprises, a local silkscreening firm. But Roth said he is not limiting himself to any one medium.

UNL Receives $40,000 Grant

The University of Nebraska-Lincoln Teachers College has received a $40,000 grant from the U.S. Office of Education's Bureau of Education for the Handicapped.

The funds will help train administrators and teachers to work with students with special needs due to handicaps.

Afraid You're Going Deaf?

Chicago, Ill.—A free offer of special interest to those who hear but do not understand words has been announced by Beltone. A non-operating model of the smallest Beltone aid ever made will be given absolutely free to anyone requesting it.

This is not a real hearing aid, but it will show you how tiny hearing help can be. It's yours to keep, free. The actual aid weighs less than a third of an ounce, and it's all at ear level, in one unit. No wires lead from body to head.

These models are free, so write for yours now. Thousands have already been mailed, so write today to Dept. 5469 Beltone Electronics Corp., 4201 W. Victoria St., Chicago, Ill., 60646.

Prices Go UP 0.8% In Month

WASHINGTON (AP) — Pushed by higher prices for food, gasoline and used cars, consumer prices increased 0.8% in June, the biggest monthly rise in inflation this year, the Labor Department said Tuesday.

Food prices increased 1.5%, the biggest jump since a 1.6% rise last September, and gasoline prices rose 3%. The major push in the food index was from meat prices, which increased 6.1% during the month.

Treasury Secretary William E. Simon called the June increase in consumer prices an "up trend" that shows that inflationary pressures remain a serious and continuing problem.

"The figures will bounce around a good deal in coming months," Simon predicted in his statement.

The June rise, which was double the May increase of 0.4%, could raise new questions about the cost of President Ford's energy program.

The administration has predicted the energy price increases resulting from lifting of most price controls on the petroleum and natural gas industries would add about 2% to the Consumer Price Index.

The Labor Department said the over-all Consumer Price Index stood at 160.6 in June, compared with the 1967 average of 100, meaning that the average cost of the same quantity of goods increased from $100 in 1967 to $160.60 last month.

In another report, the Labor Department said real spendable earnings of workers declined 0.4% in June, on a seasonally adjusted basis. The June decline followed a 4.7% increase in May that had resulted almost entirely from reductions in federal taxes.

Higher wholesale prices in months ahead for aluminum seemed certain. Executives of major aluminum companies indicated at a public hearing before the Council on Wage and Price Stability that they will follow through on announced price increase next month.

"We intend to go ahead with the increases," said Chairman W.H. Krome George of the Aluminum Co. of America, who said his company's increased averaging 2.3% were fully justified.

The 0.8% increase in the price index in June was the highest since last December when the index increased by the sam amount.

For the 12-month period ending in June, consumer prices increased 9.3% and if the June rate were continued for a 12-month period, the rate of inflation would be slightly more than 10%.

Coffee Price Rise Expected Due To Frost

NEW YORK (AP) — American consumers face higher coffee prices as a result of frost in Brazil, but industry experts could not agree Tuesday on how big the increase will be or how soon it will show up on supermarket shelves. One source said a 20% or 25-cent-a-pound boost could appear within a month.

Officials in Brazil, the world's largest coffee producer, said as much as three-fourths of the country's coffee crop had been hit by frost which struck as the blossoms were on the plants. Exports were halted pending a check of the damage.

The coffee involved is from the 1976-77 crop which will be harvested next spring, but news of the frost brought sharp increases in prices for existing coffee supplies from Brazil and other producing nations.

"The market is up 25 or 30 cents a pound," said Paul Ritter of Volkhart Brothers Inc., a member of the coffee committee of the New York Coffee & Sugar Exchange.

"This increase in prices will have to be passed on to the ctnsumer in due course.'

Ritter said the increase could show up "within a month or two" because most coffee-consuming countries have only small inventories on hand and roasters will have to buy new supplies soon.

"I wouldn't be surprised to see coffee at $1.50 or $1.75 a pound on the shelf before long," Ritter said, adding that coffee currently sells for about $1.25 or $..30 a pound.

Italian Wine 25%

New York (UPI) — Nearly 25% of all wines imported into the United States for the first quarter of this year came from Italy. The 2.094 million gallons represent an 11% increase over the same period of 1974.

Stock Mart Setback Continues

NEW YORK (AP) — Inflation and interest rate worries chipped away at stock prices Tuesday, continuing the market's largest sustained setback in two months.

But a late round of bargain hunting brought prices back from the sharply depressed levels they had reached earlier.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, down nearly 12 points at midday, was off 7.98 at 846.76 by the close.

That nevertheless left the closely watched indicator with a net drop of 35.05 points over the past five sessions — its most extensive loss since it fell 40.05 from May 15 through May 21.

Standard & Poor's 500-stock index registered a .99 decline to 91.45 for the day, while the New York Stock Exchange's own composite index slipped .56 to 49.12.

Declines outdistanced advances 1,146 to 308 among the 1,826 issues traded on the Big Board.

NYSE volume picked up to 20.66 million shares from Monday's two-week low of 16.69 million.

The early selling followed the government's report that consumer prices climbed at a 9.6 per cent annual rate in June, doubling the pace set in the previous month.

Brokers also reported continuing uneasiness over the interest rate outlook, with the Federal Reserve once again making moves in the money markets that seemed to be designed to encourage a rise in short term rates.

The late comeback was seen as largely technical. Newton D. Zinder at E. F. Hutton & Co. said some traders might have taken a leveling off trend in prices during the ealry afternoon as a sign that the worst of the market's recent decline was over.

Polaroid, the day's most active issue, jumped 2 to 42¾ on turnover of 247,200 shares. The stock has been actively traded since last week, when the company came in with sharply higher second quarter earnings.

Xerox fell 1⅛ to 63⅞ following the company's announcement late Monday that it would withdraw from the computer mainframe business, taking an $84.4 million writeoff.

Burlington Northern, which omitted its quarterly dividend, tumbled 4¼ to 31½, also in active trading.

Early Prices Opened Strong, Then Slipped

Chicago (AP) — Farm futures prices opened strong but slipped substantially during the day on the Chicago Board of Trade Tuesday.

Wheat and soybeans closed mostly higher by a few cents but corn and oats retreated from Mondays close.

Before selling pressure profit taking set in most of the strength was attributed to the need of the Soviet Union for large amounts of foreign grains. It was announced Monday that Russia had brought 167 million bushels of grains from an American exporter and that the U.S.S.R. had purchased a large amount of wheat from Australia.

Trading Marked By Caution

OMAHA, Neb. (AP)—Caution was the byword as trading was nixed on the Omaha livestock market Tuesday.

The day's hog run was estimated at about 4,500 head, with barrows and gilts seeing fairly active trade. However, the butcher trend was weak to 50-cents lower.

About 200 head of top-graders weighing in from 220-to-245 pounds cleared the day's top from $58.25-$58.50. Slightly less desirable handyweights, some of them a little on the light side, bulked from $57.50-$58.00.

Sows turned steady to 50-cents higher on tickets marked from $50.50-$52.50.

Trade on the estimated 4,500 head of cattle in the pens was moderately active.

FBI Checks Proposed For Handgun Buyers

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Ford administration Tuesday proposed FBI checks on persons who want to buy handguns and mandatory jail sentences for those who commit a crime with a dangerous weapons.

The proposals were contained in an outline given the Senate juvenile deliquency subcommittee by Atty. Gen. Edward H. Levi. He said the administration's gun control bill soon would be submitted to Congress.

Levi said the proposal does not contain a regionally triggered ban on the sale or possession of weapons as he had suggested during his confirmation hearings nor a national gun registration provision

Instead, the bill would authorize 500 more treasury agents to combat the gun black market in 10 large metropolitan areas where "the problem of handgun violence has reached crisis proportions," Levi said. He did not list the 10 areas.

The bill also would eliminate 'Saturday Night Specials" which Levi described as being "cheap, highly concealable, inaccurate, and inherently dangerous both to the possessor and to the citizenry at large."

The bill would ban importation and domestic manufacture, assembly and sale of the "Saturday Night Specials "

Levi said the administration also wants to require handguns to have a manually operated safety and combined length and height of at least 10 inches. The height would have to be at least four inches and the length at least six inches under the proposal, he said.

Revolvers also would have to pass a safety test to assure that they will not fire if dropped plus have at least a four-inch barrel and four-inch frame.

Meanwhile, FBI Director Clarence M. Kelley announced he is assigning two FBI agents to each of four cities in what he called a new assault on crime.

The program, announced after new FBI statistics showed an 18 per cent surge in the nation's crime rate, is designed to provide FBI assistance to local police efforts to enlist citizens in the fight against crime.

The areas were identified as Wilmington, Del.; Birmingham, Ala., Norfolk, Va., and DeKalb County, Ga., which includes part of Atlanta.

Levi told the subcommittee that the administration's gun control bill also would tighten up the purchasing process by requiring gun buyers to wait for 14 days before accepting delivery. The delay would give the dealer time to run a check through the local police, who would run an FBI name check, on the potential buyer.

The proposal also would ban the sale of two or more handguns to an invididual within one month and also would tighten requirements to become a licensed gun dealer.

In addition, it would change the criminal code by imposing a mandatory sentence on persons convicted of using a dangerous weapon, including a handgun, in committing a crime.

Justice Department officials said later there has been no final decision on the 10 cities where the Treasury force would be beefed up.

Administration officials are studying whether to make it the 10 largest cities, the 10 largest metropolitan areas, or possibly certain cities with particularly high incidences of gun crimes. It may turn out to be 10 cities or it might be a few more or less, department officials said.

County Accepts Jail Rates Hike

"You're the poorest horse traders I've ever seen in my life," Lancaster County Board member Bob Colin told his two fellow commissioners.

Then, forcing a rueful grin, in what he said was the interest of unanimity, Colin voted with Jan Gauger and Bruce Hamilton to raise the amount the county pays the city to house its prisoners.

The old rate was $3.50. The near rate is $5.53 per day, plus about 57 cents for each meal a prisoner eats.

Some Don't Eat

The board chose that over a flat rate of $7.23 per day without separate charges for meals. The board agreed that it would be cheaper to pay for meals as some prisoners do not stay long enough to eat.

Colin, however, tried to hold out for a lower flat rate. "I've never seen a time when the city didn't get the better end of the deal," he told Gauger and Hamilton.

In other action on a slim agenda, the board set a public hearing on a request for a license to sell off-sale beer at Inland Shores Marina at Branched Oak Lake.

The State Game Commission has already held a public hearing on the issue and voted 5-2 to approve the application.

"Your public hearing is more important," Deputy Lancaster County Atty. Michael Heavican told board members when they asked why another hearing was necessary. The board is the local governing unit, he said.

The board also voted to support an application from the Community Health Care Association to apply for $125,000 to plan a health maintenance organization.

Federal Money

Alex Slabosky told the board that federal money from the Department of Health, Education and Welfare would be sought. He said local matching money is coming from Blue Cross and Bankers Life of Nebraska.

The board also selected a high bid of $6,191 from J.C. Penney to install drapes in the new Lancaster Manor south wing.

Lancaster Manor Administrator Jerry Gibson said that Penney's was the only firm that actually surveyed the new wing. A bid of $6,871 was submitted by Brandeis and a bid of $5,529 came from National Custom Interiors.

Musical Shakespearean Play 'Light'

By BILL WALLIS

A light, entertaining evening of theater awaits those who will attend David Bell and Lis Lewis's musical adaptation of William Shakespeare's "All's Well That Ends Well," the UNL Repertory Theatre's third offering of the summer.

The show contains a good deal of light, charming music, written by Ms. Lewis and orchestrated by Alan Nielsen, delightful ballet sequences choreographed by Karen McWilliams and Bell eclectic, colorful costuming by Jo McGlone, two-dimensional scenic delights designed by Nancy Myers and Jerry Lewis's superb lighting.

The single word that sums up the evening is entertaining, and this is not always for the best. The production is also monolevel, and while the end product of this adaptation will probably appeal to many who would not otherwise have been attracted to it, those who might have come for the deeper integrities of Shakespeare's work will not be satisfied with some aspects of the production.

But if the theatre ever stops being a forum for new ideas, it is lost. This is a experiment, and a good one. The play is not Shakespeare's best work, and perhaps justifies some experimentation.

How does the experiment work? First, Shakespeare's language has been neglected. It is his glory and one of the chief glories of Western art. Of the actors on stage perhaps three or four deal with their spoken art with clarity and some depth.

Although the challenges of her character are less, Connie McCord worked beautifully as Diana. Her presentation in the final scene was one of the highlights of the second act.

Diana is at this point in league with the virtuous Helena, who is successfully portrayed by a miscast Susan Baer. Helena has been spurned and deserted by her husband of several hours. Together the two conspire to help womankind make a careless and ignorant youth a responsible member of society. They succeed, magically.

The lad's name is Bertrand, and he is son to a countess, played with elegance and coherence, but with too much broadness by Cindy Wallis. Only in her scenes with Lavatch, the lascivious, delightful clown, does the countess come fully to life. Lavatch is played with fine timing and stage sense by Mitch Tebo. Tebo's skill allowed him to catch more subtleties of character than any other actor.

Bertrand is portrayed by Greg Schaffert with liveliness and engaging qualities, but he does not have the verbal skills to complement his energies yet. Doug Brissey misplays the king of France early in the show by making him a buffoon, but his later scenes are a delightful mixture of dignity and wry humor.

Jerry Homan's portrayal of Parolles is one of the highlights of the show. He is delightful. His performance is somewhat marred by what plagues many actors in the show an overliteralness of gesture, which results from shallow line interpretation. In many cases action has replaced meaning. Jann Simpson's widow did not suffer from this characteristic, and was engaging.

There are minor points of brilliance in the production. George Hanson's mildly-foppish duke, the engaging but unintegrated prologue to Act I, and the delightful ballet introducing the second act. This is magic imposed on the magic of Shakespeare, and welcome.

This play is based on a folk tale, reshaped freely by the greatest playwright of the English tongue. The lively ensemble of this production helps maintain the magic Boccaccio intended in the telling.

LHS Graduate Receives $3,000 Art Scholarship

A $3,000 scholarship to the Kansas City Art Institute in Missouri is painting a brighter art career for 1974 Lincoln High School graduate Jon Roth.

Roth, 19, who says his main art interest is in design, will attend classes in the fall at the nationally known institute, a member of the Union of Independent Colleges in Art. About 500 students attend the four-year institute, according to Roth.

Most of Roth's work has been silkscreen designs, some of which are carried on T-shirts sold by Sirk Enterprises, a local silkscreening firm But Roth said he is not limiting himself to any one medium.

UNL Receives $40,000 Grant

The University of Nebraska-Lincoln Teachers College has received a $40,000 grant from the U.S. Office of Education's Bureau of Education for the Handicapped.

The funds will help train administrators and teachers to work with students with special needs due to handicaps.

South Central Nebraska Flooded By Heavy Rains

Lowlands along the Little Blue River in the Deweese area were flooded following heavy rains in the south central part of the state early Tuesday.

Rains up to 4.55 inches fell in the Little Blue and Sandy Creek basins.

The Clay County sheriff's office reported several county roads in the Deweese area were under water, but problems were minor.

Out Of Banks

Sandy Creek was out of its banks in Clay and Thayer Counties, spilling out onto farmland.

The National Weather Service said the 4.55 inches was recorded at Holstein in Adams County. Fairfield received 4.40 inches and Clay Center reported 4.35 inches.

Other large rainfall reports included Glenvil 4.10, Edgar 4.00, Amherst 3.75, Deweese 3.77, Hebron 3.68, Hastings 3.50, Davenport 3.36, Fairbury 3.17, Bruning 3.61, and Kearney and Harvard 3.00.

The city of Hastings had water in low-lying streets for a time early Tuesday, and Lincoln Park in the south part of the city was flooded. There also was some flooding of roads at the airport.

Water On Highway

U.S. 6 south and east of Hastings was reported under five inches of water for a time.

Pawnee Creek, six miles east of Ayr, was reported out of its banks.

For a time, the Union Pacific tracks near Carleton were under water.

Minor lowland flooding was reported at Hebron Tuesday night along the Little Blue.

Lightning during Monday night's storm and the Saturday night storm kept Hebron firemen on the lert.

Buildings Burn

A farm building owned by Thayer County Agent Marvin Sefrna was destroyed by flames Monday after it was hit by lightning. A barn filled with hay on the Ernest Naiman farm at nearby Gilead burned Saturday night. The Dennis Kroeger house in Hebron received minor damage when it was hit by lightning Saturday.

Lincoln received .72 of an inch of rainfall during the night Monday and early Tuesday, accompanied by considerable lightning.

Heavy thunderstorms broke out again Tuesday night in southern Nebraska near Beaver City and Superior.

Good For Crops

Meantime, the soaking rains in south central and southeastern Nebraska "couldn't have been any better," according to Doug Murfield, director of the State-Federal Division of Agricultural Statistics.

This was one of those so-called "million dollar rains," Murfield said. "Last Friday we said if we didn't get rain within a week to 10 days, crops were going to start hurting."

The rains which fell Monday night and early Tuesday came during the period when corn is tasseling "and certainly keep crop prospects in good shape," Murfield said. "But we will need continued timely rains between now and Sept. 10 to assure a good crop."

One problem, he noted, is the state's lack of adequate subsoil moisture this year.

But he also said in places where rain fell, "any stress corn, sorghum and soybeans were under should be relieved."

Murfield added that probably the only area which would like to see clear weather for a little while longer is the Panhandle, where about 80% of the wheat is still to be harvested.

The state's forecast calls for the chance of thundershowers through Wednesday night. Highs Wednesday will be mostly in the 80s with lows from the upper 50s in the northwest to the upper 60s in the southeast.

Rain Reports

Latest rainfall received in Nebraska was topped by Holstein's 4.55 inches in the south central area. Other reports from the National Weather Service included:

Rocky Sees Issue

Cincinnati (UPI) — Vice President Nelson A. Rockefeller said rising gasoline prices will be a major 1976 campaign issue.

ABP's Dumas, Texas, Plant Sale Completed

Omaha (UPI) — The $18 million sale of the American Beef Packers Inc., Dumas, Tex., plant to Swift & Co. of Chicago was consumated Tuesday and proceeds from the transaction should provide the financing necessary for a plan to repay creditors holding some $30 million in ABP debts.

The agreement to sell the Dumas plant, one of the largest most modern meat packing and processing facilities in the world, was first announced by ABP and Swift on April 11.

However, several conditins had to be met, including approval by the Justice Department that the transaction was free of Swift violating federal anti-trust laws.

The Justice Department subsequently cleared the sale in the form of a "no action" letter on June 18 meaning that it would remain neutral on the transaction.

ABP Board Chairman and President Frank R. West said the sale "is a key element in American Beef Packers' plan of repayment."

"Now that the sale has been consumated," West said, "American Beef can go forward to the next step of its plan of repayment and rehabilitation."

West has submitted his resignation from ABP providing certain conditions are met, including the development of an adequate plan to pay creditors, particularly livestock feeders.

Negotiations on that plan continued Tuesday between attorneys for ABP, the creditors committee, and General Electric Credit Corp., the largest secured creditor in American Beef's limited bankruptcy proceedings.

ABP says a $10 million cost overrun on the $20 million Dumas Plant was one of the prime factors which forced ABP to file the limited bankruptcy in Omaha Jan. 7.

The Dumas Plant was dedicated May 11, 1974, but never did attain full production status.

Up to $14 million from the Dumas sale could go into the pot for the creditors' payment plan.

ABP has also sold its Minatare, Neb., feedlot operation to a Michigan firm for some $9 million and a wholly owned subsidiary, Roberts Dairy Co., of Omaha, to a group of Omaha businessmen for $6.9 million.

Midwest May Get Alaskan Natural Gas

Tulsa (AP) — More than one-third of the natural gas reserves in Alaska's Prudhoe Bay may go to the Midwest if proposed marketing agreement hold firm, a trade publication reported.

The Oil and Gas Journal said that agreements filed on the 26-27 trillion cubic feet of natural gas also indicate that one fourth would go to the West, 15% to the East with one-fourth still uncommitted.

NPPD Lawsuit Seeks $4.2 Million From LES

The long-standing argument between the Nebraska Public Power District (NPPD) and the Lincoln Electric System (LES) has led to another suit in Lancaster District Court.

The suit was filed by NPPD to recover just under $4.2 million that it contends LES owes it for energy it has supplied since July 1, 1974.

The suit claims that LES has withheld that much money from payments to NPPD on the argument that it is being overcharged.

The argument was aired in Lancaster District Court on an earlier suit. The suit is still pending.

LES argues that since it buys only a limited amount of electricity from NPPD, it should not be forced to pay for power plants and transmission lines needed by NPPD to supply electricity to other NPPD customers.

Questioning Caller Fraud, Say North Platte Officials

North Platte (AP) — Police here are investigating reports that a man has been calling area women, and asking them intimate, personal questions.

An estimated 150 to 200 women in the North Platte-area have recieved telephone calls from a man who says he is associated with a women's store that will soon be opening in a North Platte shopping center.

The caller asks the women's intimate apparel sizes, what colors they like, and other personal questions, police said Tuesday.

Chamber of commerce officials say the whole thing is a fraud, and a check with the shopping center named by the caller showed that no women's apparel stores are to be opened in the near future.

The report is very similar to recent calls made in the Omaha area.

In the Omaha case, a man, who said he represented a women's store that was soon to be opened, asked similar questions, and told the women that they would be mailed some free garments and foundations. However, several women said that after waiting for a few months, the promised garments did not arrive.

Prices Go UP 0.8% In Month

WASHINGTON (AP) — Pushed by higher prices for food, gasoline and used cars, consumer prices increased 0.8% in June, the biggest monthly rise in inflation this year, the Labor Department said Tuesday.

Food prices increased 1.5%, the biggest jump since a 1.6% rise last September, and gasoline prices rose 3%. The major push in the food index was from meat prices, which increased 6.1% during the month.

Treasury Secretary William E. Simon called the June increase in consumer prices an "up trend" that shows that inflationary pressures remain a serious and continuing problem.

"The figures will bounce around a good deal in coming months," Simon predicted in his statement.

The June rise, which was double the May increase of 0.4%, could raise new questions about the cost of President Ford's energy program.

The administration has predicted the energy price increases resulting from lifting of most price controls on the petroleum and natural gas industries would add about 2% to the Consumer Price Index.

The Labor Department said the over-all Consumer Price Index stood at 160.6 in June, compared with the 1967 average of 100, meaning that the average cost of the same quantity of goods increased from $100 in 1967 to $160.60 last month.

In another report, the Labor Department said real spendable earnings of workers declined 0.4% in June, on a seasonally adjusted basis. The June decline followed a 4.7% increase in May that had resulted almost entirely from reductions in federal taxes.

Higher wholesale prices in months ahead for aluminum seemed certain. Executives of major aluminum companies indicated at a public hearing before the Council on Wage and Price Stability that they will follow through on announced price increase next month.

"We intend to go ahead with the increases," said Chairman W.H. Krome George of the Aluminum Co. of America, who said his company's increased averaging 2.3% were fully justified.

The 0.8% increase in the price index in June was the highest since last December when the index increased by the sam amount.

For the 12-month period ending in June, consumer prices increased 9.3% and if the June rate were continued for a 12-month period, the rate of inflation would be slightly more than 10%.

Coffee Price Rise Expected Due To Frost

NEW YORK (AP) — American consumers face higher coffee prices as a result of frost in Brazil, but industry experts could not agree Tuesday on how big the increase will be or how soon it will show up on supermarket shelves. One source said a 20% or 25-cent-a-pound boost could appear within a month.

Officials in Brazil, the world's largest coffee producer, said as much as three-fourths of the country's coffee crop had been hit by frost which struck as the blossoms were on the plants. Exports were halted pending a check of the damage.

The coffee involved is from the 1976-77 crop which will be harvested next spring, but news of the frost brought sharp increases in prices for existing coffee supplies from Brazil and other producing nations.

"The market is up 25 or 30 cents a pound," said Paul Ritter of Volkhart Brothers Inc., a member of the coffee committee of the New York Coffee & Sugar Exchange.

"This increase in prices will have to be passed on to the ctnsumer in due course.'

Ritter said the increase could show up "within a month or two" because most coffee-consuming countries have only small inventories on hand and roasters will have to buy new supplies soon.

"I wouldn't be surprised to see coffee at $1.50 or $1.75 a pound on the shelf before long," Ritter said, adding that coffee currently sells for about $1.25 or $..30 a pound.

Italian Wine 25%

New York (UPI) — Nearly 25% of all wines imported into the United States for the first quarter of this year came from Italy. The 2.094 million gallons represent an 11% increase over the same period of 1974.

Stock Mart Setback Continues

NEW YORK (AP) — Inflation and interest rate worries chipped away at stock prices Tuesday, continuing the market's largest sustained setback in two months.

But a late round of bargain hunting brought prices back from the sharply depressed levels they had reached earlier.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, down nearly 12 points at midday, was off 7.98 at 846.76 by the close.

That nevertheless left the closely watched indicator with a net drop of 35.05 points over the past five sessions — its most extensive loss since it fell 40.05 from May 15 through May 21.

Standard & Poor's 500-stock index registered a .99 decline to 91.45 for the day, while the New York Stock Exchange's own composite index slipped .56 to 49.12.

Declines outdistanced advances 1,146 to 308 among the 1,826 issues traded on the Big Board.

NYSE volume picked up to 20.66 million shares from Monday's two-week low of 16.69 million.

The early selling followed the government's report that consumer prices climbed at a 9.6 per cent annual rate in June, doubling the pace set in the previous month.

Brokers also reported continuing uneasiness over the interest rate outlook, with the Federal Reserve once again making moves in the money markets that seemed to be designed to encourage a rise in short term rates.

The late comeback was seen as largely technical. Newton D. Zinder at E. F. Hutton & Co. said some traders might have taken a leveling off trend in prices during the ealry afternoon as a sign that the worst of the market's recent decline was over.

Polaroid, the day's most active issue, jumped 2 to 42¾ on turnover of 247,200 shares. The stock has been actively traded since last week, when the company came in with sharply higher second quarter earnings.

Xerox fell 1⅛ to 63⅞ following the company's announcement late Monday that it would withdraw from the computer mainframe business, taking an $84.4 million writeoff.

Burlington Northern, which omitted its quarterly dividend, tumbled 4¼ to 31½, also in active trading.

Early Prices Opened Strong, Then Slipped

Chicago (AP) — Farm futures prices opened strong but slipped substantially during the day on the Chicago Board of Trade Tuesday.

Wheat and soybeans closed mostly higher by a few cents but corn and oats retreated from Mondays close.

Before selling pressure profit taking set in most of the strength was attributed to the need of the Soviet Union for large amounts of foreign grains. It was announced Monday that Russia had brought 167 million bushels of grains from an American exporter and that the U.S.S.R. had purchased a large amount of wheat from Australia.

Trading Marked By Caution

OMAHA, Neb. (AP)—Caution was the byword as trading was nixed on the Omaha livestock market Tuesday.

The day's hog run was estimated at about 4,500 head, with barrows and gilts seeing fairly active trade. However, the butcher trend was weak to 50-cents lower.

About 200 head of top-graders weighing in from 220-to-245 pounds cleared the day's top from $58.25-$58.50. Slightly less desirable handyweights, some of them a little on the light side, bulked from $57.50-$58.00.

Sows turned steady to 50-cents higher on tickets marked from $50.50-$52.50.

Trade on the estimated 4,500 head of cattle in the pens was moderately active.

Kim's Lad Wins In Kernel Stakes

By MARK GORDON
Star Sports Writer

Rodolfo Calderon knew he would have trouble winning with Kim's Lad going only four furlongs.

The colt had a reputation for not breaking very well and the break, obviously, is vitally important in a short sprint. Besides that, Kim's Lad was starting from the outside post position.

"I knew he wouldn't break good because six furlongs is really his best distance," noted Calderon after steering the Frank Bemis-owned speedster to a one-length verdict Tuesday at the State Fairgrounds in the $4,420 Kernel Stakes.

"He really doesn't have the speed at the start," he continued. "But when we got to the quarter-pole he really started moving. The last 50 yards I was really going good. I didn't know he was going to take hold of the track so good."

Perhaps the real secret to Kim's Lad victory was Calderon's expert handling in the race where it seemed the outside post and short distance were actually disadvantages.

Calderon knew he had to get Kim's Lad ready to run quicker than usual.

"That's why I worked him real good before the race. He stood real good in the gate, but he was a little nervous in the paddock. So I knew I'd have to work on him before the race."

That's where an astute ride will make the difference. As usual, Kim's Lad broke fifth in the 10-horse field of 2-year-old colts and geldings. He fell back slightly to sixth down the backstretch, but had improved to third entering the stretch behind pacesetting Red's Mighty Barb.

Then Calderon went to work with Kim's Lad who was pulling away from the field at the wire. Undoubtedly, he was helped by the drying out track which was listed as sloppy.

The OK Farm, Inc's Mount Air, the 4-5 favorite, was never really in contention. The closest he came to the leaders was fourth before fading to finish a beaten sixth.

It was Kim's Lad's first victory since winning a maiden contest at Fonner Park in Grand Island. His last two races produced two seconds at Ak-Sar-Ben over 5½-furlongs.

Overall, his record improved to two triumphs and two seconds in nine outings this year. The $2,652 winner's share boosted his 1975 earnings to $7,848 for his Omaha owner.

As a 9-2 outsider, Kim's Lad returned $11.60, $6.20 and $4.20. Mrs. Howard Synhorst's Red's Mighty Barb, ridden by Fred Ecoffey, placed for $11.40 and $8.00 while Dale Wolff's Quick Bart, ridden by Wayne Anderson, showed for $6.80.

The time was :49 1-5 in the fourth running of the first Lincoln feature for juvenile males.

Record Crowd, Handle

The crowd of 5,936, which wagered $329,049, represented State Fairgrounds' records for a non-opening day Tuesday. In fact, the mutuel handle was $55,982 better than last year's $273,067.

The total Lincoln mutual handle for the first six days of racing is up by 18.69 per cent over a corresponding period of 1974.

Low Double

The Tuesday daily double combining Gordon Moore's Henry S. ($3.40) in the first race with Dave Anderson's Eagle's Son ($5.20) in the second produced the season's lowest daily double.

The 1-2 combination returned a paltry $9.80. The previous low was $11.40.

Two Winners

Riders Louis Duthie and Dan Switzer each recorded two victories.

Duthie scored with the Kansas City Racing Stable's Greekolia ($23.20) in the fourth and on Gary Kelley's Jet Respect ($4.40) in the fifth. Switzer tallied on Frank Chapman's Rep's Bar ($3.80) in the sixth and on the Golden Key Stable's Bishop Brown ($10.00) in the eighth.

Distance Changed

The distance of Tuesday's eighth race at the State Fairgrounds was changed from one mile to one mile and 70 yards because of the muddy conditions of the pullout at the mile pole.

State Fairgrounds' general manager Henry Brandt thanked the horsemen and riders for their cooperation in slightly lengthening the chase for 4-year-olds & up.

"We had no trouble at all in changing the race. Everyone was most cooperative," he said, in adding it was the first distance change in the decade he has been in Lincoln.

Aunt Priscilla Disappointed

I couldn't believe the big crowd that was at the races Tuesday at the State Fairgrounds.

I always thought Tuesday would be a nice quiet day to watch the races, but I guess that cute Henry Brandt is really happy with the big crowds and all the people watching ponies.

Aunt Priscilla Loses $4

I thought I had a winner in the fifth race when Capitol Gal and Jet Respect finished so close. But Capitol Gal lost by just a little bit.

My Mount Air didn't do very well in the feature so I lost $4 for the day. That dropped my $104 spree fund to $111.80.

On Wednesday, I'm going to put my $2 win tickets on Nervewracking in the third and Supreme Son in the fourth.

Lucchesi Shows Godfather Image

ARLINGTON, Tex. (AP) — Frank Joseph Lucchesi, with his salt-and-pepper hair and dark complexion, looks more like a figure out of the movie "Godfather" than the new manager of the Texas Rangers of the American League.

The 49-year-old Lucchesi, a native of San Francisco who now lives in Foster City, Calif., played 13 years in the minor leagues and never got one at bat in the majors.

He good-naturedly kids himself that he played in more towns than "Gone With the Wind."

"Joe Devine (a former New York Yankee scout) told me once that the closest I'd ever get to Yankee Stadium as a player was to see it on a postcard," Lucchesi said with a laugh. "He was right.

"You talk about a man born with a challenge. Every town I went to they would spell my name Lou Casey."

Lucchesi was named manager of the Rangers Monday night after working since 1974 as a third base coach under Billy Martin, who was fired.

"Frank will do a good job," said Martin as he cleaned out his desk. "He's a sound baseball man."

Actually, the 5-foot-8, 180-pound Lucchesi—who admits he could stand to shed a pound or two—didn't do all that bad as a player in the minors. He had a career batting average of .276 in such whistlestop towns as Salem, Ore.; Ventura, Calif.; Twin Falls, S.D.; Thomasville, Ga., and Pine Bluff, Ark.

He was an outfielder with little power, hitting only 36 home runs in 4,231 at bats, an average of about three home runs a year. "I started managing when I was real young, and you can look at my record and see why," Lucchesi said.

His first managing job was at Medford, Ore., in the Far West League in 1951. Lucchesi earned numerous managerial honors in his climb up the ladder to the big leagues.

The peppery Lucchesi was twice manager of the year in the Eastern League, and once each in the Southern Association and Pacific Coast League.

In 1970 he got his big break with the Philadelphia Phillies and managed them to a fifth-place finish. He was ousted in 1972 after two consectutive sixth-place seasons.

Lucchesi's Oklahoma City team came in third in 1973 in the Pacific Coast League.

Luchessi is famed for his arguments with umpires, which can become rib-tickling delights for the spectators.

In one Ranger game this year, Luchessi got on his knees, buried home plate in a pile of dirt and held his hat over his heart in a mock memorial service. Naturally, he was ejected from the contest.

His new third base coach, Jim Piersall, a character himself, reminded Luchessi of himself in Monday night's 6-0 victory over Boston.

"Jim looked like me down there against Boston. But I'll have to give him just an A minus because he got into an argument with an umpire and that's my job now," Luchessi laughed.

Luchessi said his philosophy is simple—"I gamble. I don't play by the book. My whole baseball career has been a challenge and I'm not going to change now."

Saints Obtain Chiefs' Peay

THIBODAUX, La. (AP) — The New Orleans Saints acquired offensive tackle Francis Peay from Kansas City Tuesday for an undisclosed draft choice.

Peay, 31, is a nine-year National Football League veteran. A No. 1 draft choice of the New York Giants, the 6-foot-5, 250-pound Peay starred with the Green Bay Packers before being traded to the Chiefs in 1973 and '74.

Two more Saints were felled by minor injuries during Tuesday's practice session. Defensive end Joe Owens was sidelined by a knee sprain that will keep him out about 10 days, and tight end Henry suffered a mild concussion.

CLEVELAND (AP) — The Cleveland Cavaliers have signed their No. 4 National Basketball Association draft choice, Eric Fernsten, the club announced Tuesday.

Fernsten, 6-foot-9, 205 pounds, is a forward-center from the University of San Francisco.

Fernsten averaged 7.4 points per game at San Francisco and pulled in 9.4 rebounds per game.

AAA Shut Out For Falstaff

Falstaff shut out Racquet Lounge, 5-0 Tuesday in AAA fast pitch softball at Ballard Field.

Rick Boals and Bryce Doebele both had two hits, including one home run apiece and a homer by Tom Novak to pace Falstaff. Lefty Sheary got the win, striking out seven batters.

In the second game, Pizza Hut and Valentinos went 11 innings before Valentinos could send someone around for the 9-8 win. Larry Wright singled in Doug Loos for the winning run. Bob Barrett powered out a home run and a triple.

Regional Post To Gordon

Omaha (UPI) — The former business manager and public relations man for the Omaha Knights' hockey club has been named to a post with the Nebraska Easter Seal Society.

The society said Curt Gordon, Omaha, has been appointed a regional director over the society's program in Cass, Dodge, Sarpy and Washington counties.

The hockey club was disbanded by the parent Atlanta Flames organization last season.

Gordon served with the Knights for nine years. He is a member of the Omaha Sportscasters Association and the Chamber of Commerce's Sports Committee.

Lincoln Club Downs Fremont

Omaha — The Lincoln Water Polo Club defeated the Fremont club, 14-6 here Tuesday.

The Lincoln club was paced by Doug Johnson and Tom Heuke who scored four goals apiece.

The Lincoln team will compete in the Zone Two qualifying meet in St. Louis this weekend.

Sieckmann 7th In Trans-Miss.

Kansas City — After the two rounds of qualifying play in the Trans-Mississippi Amateur Golf Tournament here Tuesday, Omahan Tom Sieckmann has moved into seventh, three shots off the lead.

Sieckmann repeated his score of 72 for a 144, behind the pace set by Bill Morrill of Fort Worth, Tex., with a 141.

Frank Rose, a former Fairbury native, also duplicated his Monday score of 75 for a 149. The top 63 will move into the match play action Wednesday.

Tourney Games Rescheduled

BEATRICE, Neb. (AP)—Heavy rains which fell over southern Nebraska Monday night and early Tuesday have forced a scheduling change in the 1975 Nebraska Semi Professional Baseball Tournament.

Tuesday night's games were postponed because of wet grounds, and no games are scheduled Wednesday.

The tourney will pick up Thursday night with Doug's Place of Alma facing the Lincoln Pirates, and Beatrice going against Papillion Johns.

K-State Seeks Outside Funds

MANHATTAN, Kan. (AP) — An increased statewide drive for funds to finance men's and women's athletics at Kansas State University was indicated after an administrative meeting Tuesday.

A 30 per cent increase in funding the women's athletic program the next fiscal year at KSU has already been tentatively approved, apparently as a result of the new federal Title IX, which went into effect Monday.

Title IX prohibits sex discrimination in college and university activities, including athletics.

"Kansas State University is not unique in having these problems," Dr. Duane Acker, the new KSU president, said. "They exist nationally. We have problems, but we have too many good things going for us to look any direction but up."

Acker met with fulltime men's coaches, the men's athletic director and the chairman of Kansas State's new intercollegiate athletic council.

The new IAC which came into existence only this summer has been charged by Acker with establishing policy for men's and women's intercollegiate athletics, and with monitoring athletic programs to see that those policies are followed.

In one of its first official actions the IAC ordered a $200,600 reduction in the proposed 1975-76 men's athletic budget in a move toward substantially reducing an accumulated deficit currently estimated at $365,000. The council will meet Thursday to officially approve the $1.76 million men's budget for 1975-76.

Final action on the women's budget is expected Aug. 8. A major share of the men's budget is ticket sales and donations. State appropriations provide only $112,827 for men, and $99,917 for women.

Acker said, "It is essential that our operation be fiscally sound if we are to insure longtime strength of K-State athletics. We have student athletes who are competitive, coaches who are high-type people, fans who give good support, and membership in the Big Eight Conference.

"We will operate the program in a way that will give our student athletics good opportunity to compete, and that will warrant support by students, faculty, alumni and other fans."

Dr. Acker has asked the IAC also to consider:

—Monitoring expenditures on a bi-weekly basis.

—Developing a schedule for paying debts of the men's program to the KSU Endowment Association.

—Coordinating an increasing fund-raising effort within Kansas for both men's and women's athletics.

—The use and financing of the men's athletic dormitory.

Koosman Leads Mets To Victory

By United Press International

Jerry Koosman pitched a six-hitter and stole the first base of his career Tuesday night when the New York Mets defeated the Cincinnati Reds 3-1.

Koosman walked four and struck out eight in raising his record to 9-7 while Jack Billingham suffered his fifth loss against 10 wins.

With New York ahead 1-0, Koosman singled to lead off the third and then stole second and went to third on Bill Plummer's throwing error. He scored on Wayne Garrett's sacrifice fly.

Greg Luzinski scored the only run of the game on a wild throw by catcher Vic Correll as the Philadelphia Phillies beat the Atlanta Braves 1-0. Steve Carlton pitched a three-hitter and struck out eight to make his record 9-7.

Jay Johnstone led off the ninth with an infield single and Luzinski and Dick Allen walked. Mike Schmidt popped out and Johnny Oates grounded into a forceout at the plate but Correll's throw to first for an attempted double play was wild and Luzinski skored.

Gary Carter singled in the winning run with one out in the 11th inning giving the Montreal Expos a 2-1 triumph over the Houston Astros. Dale Murray pitched one inning of relief to win his fourth game for the Expos.

Johnny Grubb tripled and scored the only run of the game on Tito Fuentes' single to give the San Diego Padres a 1-0 win over the Pittsburgh Pirates in an early-ending West Coast game. Randy Jones pitched a seven-hitter for his fifth shutout and 12th win of the season while Bruce Kison was the loser.

City Offers Baseball For The 'In-Betweens'

By KEN HAMBLETON
Star Sports Writer

You really want to play baseball. But you're too old for Little Chiefs and not good enough for American Legion baseball. So where do you go?

Well, Lincolnite Don Hobbs has something for everyone in that predicament. Hobbs is the director of the Lincoln Parks and Recreation Boys Baseball program and anybody can join.

"We try to serve the in-between group. That is the group of youngsters that don't make the Legion teams, are too old for Little Chiefs and too young for the Capital City League," said Hobbs, the league director for the past six years.

"We have 12 districts and four teams per district. Each team is for a different age group," Hobbs explained. The A division is for 14-15-year-olds; B for 13-14 year-olds, C for 13-year-olds and the D for kids 10-12-years-old.

The league started sometime back in the 1930s in Lincoln but really got going in the early 1950s according to Hobbs. "We took a kind of slump when the legion program started in the 60s. And the top players in our league started to go to the Legion program," Hobbs said. "But a lot of kids just don't develop quick enough to participate in that program."

More than 560 boys play in the Recreation league now and according to Hobbs the interest is constantly growing.

"We're just trying to provide something for as large a group of boys that we can," Hobbs said. "our games are in the afternoon, and the kids play twice a week, with one day of practice."

"More instruction and better instruction are two of our main goals," Hobbs added. "All of our coaches have either played or are currently playing baseball. So we aren't really looking for parent participation. And that's a big difference between our league and others."

Hobbs, who has been involved with the program since 1956, when he started coaching, feels that the city league provides a lot of pluses.

"We are offering top notch instruction and an opportunity for a large group of boys to have fun with baseball. And we help keep a kid in baseball that otherwise might have quit, because he maybe wasn't good enough for the other leagues," Hobbs said. "But we also have a number of talented kids that have gone on to play high school baseball or Legion baseball the year after playing with us."

"A lot of our kids go out to Sherman Field, and see how good the Legion players are, and want to join that league some day," Hobbs noted. "So they come to us with the idea of learning the game and the skills involved."

Hobbs also noted one of the other benefits of the league is that it provides jobs for the Legion baseball players. "We hire the Legion players for our umpires, so we have impartiality."

"If we can make the game more enjoyable for a large group of kids and have a bit of fun in doing it, then we have reached our goals," Hobbs concluded.

Gal Misses 300 Game

It started out to be one of those bad nights for Lettie Evans Monday at Plaza Bowl. But it turned out to be one of the good ones instead.

Evans struggled through her first game with no spares, several splits and a couple of strikes until her husband, Mike, showed her a line to bowl over.

Once instructed, Lettie couldn't and didn't miss for 14 consecutive strikes — the last five of her first game and the first nine frames of her second.

With the nine straight to open the second game, she had a chance at 300, something no Lincoln woman bowler has accomplished in league play, but pulled her first shot in the tenth frame high, leaving split and settling for a 265 game.

"Since I got 14 strikes in-a-row, I wasn't as disappointed as I would have been if I'd had nine and missed because I know now I can get 12 in-a-row," she said.

"I wasn't really nervous in the tenth frame until I suddenly realized that nobody else was bowling," she added. "I thought to myself, 'If everybody's watching, I've just got to at least hit the head pin,' — and I did," she said ruefully.

As it turned out the 265 game was two pins short of her best, a 267 shot this summer in the Friday morning league, also at Plaza.

Bowling on the same pair of lanes, opposing anchor person Jocelyn Baade recorded a 253 score the following game.

"When you're bowling against Lettie, what else can you do?" laughed Jocelyn.

East Hills Tankers Win

The East Hills Alligators, a newly-formed Lincoln swim team, splashed to its initial win of the season over the weekend.

Led by wins from Mary Naviaux, Tom Naviaux, Tom Focht and Jane Raglin, the Alligators scored 286 points to down Belmont who finished second with 230.5 points while Eden's team was third with 218.5.

A Sports Roundup

FOOTBALL

New leadershp in football contract talks don't seem to be helping. New president of the NFL Players' Association Kermit Alexander and Sargent Karch, new executive director of the management council and spokesman for the owners' group, were in on last year's talks which led to the strike. No agreements have yet been reached.

The trade that sent Marv Fleming to the Washington Redskins and Charley Harraway to the Miami Dolphins may be called off if neither athlete reports to his respective camp. The Redskins also announced that Roosevelt Taylor retired after 14 years of professional football. Taylor is a former Chicago Bear.

Ted Hendricks said he will definitely not play for the Green Bay Packers this season.

Running back Clarence Davis signed a new contract with the Oakland Raiders and

South Central Nebraska Flooded By Heavy Rains

Lowlands along the Little Blue River in the Deweese area were flooded following heavy rains in the south central part of the state early Tuesday.

Rains up to 4.55 inches fell in the Little Blue and Sandy Creek basins.

The Clay County sheriff's office reported several county roads in the Deweese area were under water, but problems were minor.

Out Of Banks

Sandy Creek was out of its banks in Clay and Thayer Counties, spilling out onto farmland.

The National Weather Service said the 4.55 inches was recorded at Holstein in Adams County. Fairfield received 4.40 inches and Clay Center reported 4.35 inches.

Other large rainfall reports included Glenvil 4.10, Edgar 4.00, Amherst 3.75, Deweese 3.77, Hebron 3.68, Hastings 3.50, Davenport 3.36, Fairbury 3.17, Bruning 3.61, and Kearney and Harvard 3.00.

The city of Hastings had water in low-lying streets for a time early Tuesday, and Lincoln Park in the south part of the city was flooded. There also was some flooding of roads at the airport.

Water On Highway

U.S. 6 south and east of Hastings was reported under five inches of water for a time.

Pawnee Creek, six miles east of Ayr, was reported out of its banks.

For a time, the Union Pacific tracks near Carleton were under water.

Minor lowland flooding was reported at Hebron Tuesday night along the Little Blue.

Lightning during Monday night's storm and the Saturday night storm kept Hebron firemen on the ilert.

Buildings Burn

A farm building owned by Thayer County Agent Marvin Sefrna was destroyed by flames Monday after it was hit by lightning. A barn filled with hay on the Ernest Naiman farm at nearby Gilead burned Saturday night. The Dennis Kroeger house in Hebron received minor damage when it was hit by lightning Saturday.

Lincoln received .72 of an inch of rainfall during the night Monday and early Tuesday, accompanied by considerable lightning.

Heavy thunderstorms broke out again Tuesday night in southern Nebraska near Beaver City and Superior.

Good For Crops

Meantime, the soaking rains in south central and southeastern Nebraska "couldn't have been any better," according to Doug Murfield, director of the State-Federal Division of Agricultural Statistics.

This was one of those so-called "million dollar rains," Murfield said. "Last Friday we said if we didn't get rain within a week to 10 days, crops were going to start hurting."

The rains which fell Monday night and early Tuesday came during the period when corn is tasseling "and certainly keep crop prospects in good shape," Murfield said. "But we will need continued timely rains between now and Sept. 10 to assure a good crop."

One problem, he noted, is the state's lack of adequate subsoil moisture this year.

But he also said in places where rain fell, "any stress corn, sorghum and soybeans were under should be relieved."

Murfield added that probably the only area which would like to see clear weather for a little while longer is the Panhandle, where about 80% of the wheat is still to be harvested.

The state's forecast calls for the chance of thundershowers through Wednesday night. Highs Wednesday will be mostly in the 80s with lows from the upper 50s in the northwest to the upper 60s in the southeast.

Rain Reports

Latest rainfall received in Nebraska was topped by Holstein's 4.55 inches in the south central area. Other reports from the National Weather Service included:

Rocky Sees Issue

Cincinnati (UPI) — Vice President Nelson A. Rockefeller said rising gasoline prices will be a major 1976 campaign issue.

ABP's Dumas, Texas, Plant Sale Completed

Omaha (UPI) — The $18 million sale of the American Beef Packers Inc., Dumas, Tex., plant to Swift & Co. of Chicago was consumated Tuesday and proceeds from the transaction should provide the financing necessary for a plan to repay creditors holding some $30 million in ABP debts.

The agreement to sell the Dumas plant, one of the largest most modern meat packing and processing facilities in the world, was first announced by ABP and Swift on April 11.

However, several conditins had to be met, including approval by the Justice Department that the transaction was free of Swift violating federal anti-trust laws.

The Justice Department subsequently cleared the sale in the form of a "no action" letter on June 18 meaning that it would remain neutral on the transaction.

ABP Board Chairman and President Frank R. West said the sale "is a key element in American Beef Packers' plan of repayment."

"Now that the sale has been consumated," West said, "American Beef can go forward to the next step of its plan of repayment and rehabilitation."

West has submitted his resignation from ABP providing certain conditions are met, including the development of an adequate plan to pay creditors, particularly livestock feeders.

Negotiations on that plan continued Tuesday between attorneys for ABP, the creditors committee, and General Electric Credit Corp., the largest secured creditor in American Beef's limited bankruptcy proceedings.

ABP says a $10 million cost overrun on the $20 million Dumas Plant was one of the prime factors which forced ABP to file the limited bankruptcy in Omaha Jan. 7.

The Dumas Plant was dedicated May 11, 1974, but never did attain full production status.

Up to $14 million from the Dumas sale could go into the pot for the creditors' payment plan.

ABP has also sold its Minatare, Neb., feedlot operation to a Michigan firm for some $9 million and a wholly owned subsidiary, Roberts Dairy Co., of Omaha, to a group of Omaha businessmen for $6.9 million.

Midwest May Get Alaskan Natural Gas

Tulsa (AP) — More than one-third of the natural gas reserves in Alaska's Prudhoe Bay may go to the Midwest if proposed marketing agreement hold firm, a trade publication reported.

The Oil and Gas Journal said that agreements filed on the 26-27 trillion cubic feet of natural gas also indicate that one fourth would go to the West, 15% to the East with one-fourth still uncommitted.

NPPD Lawsuit Seeks $4.2 Million From LES

The long-standing argument between the Nebraska Public Power District (NPPD) and the Lincoln Electric System (LES) has led to another suit in Lancaster District Court.

The suit was filed by NPPD to recover just under $4.2 million that it contends LES owes it for energy it has supplied since July 1, 1974.

The suit claims that LES has withheld that much money from payments to NPPD on the argument that it is being overcharged.

The argument was aired in Lancaster District Court on an earlier suit. The suit is still pending.

LES argues that since it buys only a limited amount of electricity from NPPD, it should not be forced to pay for power plants and transmission lines needed by NPPD to supply electricity to other NPPD customers.

Questioning Caller Fraud, Say North Platte Officials

North Platte (AP) — Police here are investigating reports that a man has been calling area women, and asking them intimate, personal questions.

An estimated 150 to 200 women in the North Platte-area have recieved telephone calls from a man who says he is associated with a women's store that will soon be opening in a North Platte shopping center.

The caller asks the women's intimate apparel sizes, what colors they like, and other personal questions, police said Tuesday.

Chamber of commerce officials say the whole thing is a fraud, and a check with the shopping center named by the caller showed that no women's apparel stores are to be opened in the near future.

The report is very similar to recent calls made in the Omaha area.

In the Omaha case, a man, who said he represented a women's store that was soon to be opened, asked similar questions, and told the women that they would be mailed some free garments and foundations. However, several women said that after waiting for a few months, the promised garments did not arrive.

Folk-Hero Dean Sparkled With Homespun Wit

EDITORS NOTE: A year ago this week, Dizzy Dean, one of baseball's most colorful characters, died. In the following article, a former reporter remembers some of the incidents which endeared Dean to millions.

By CURT SMITH
For The Associated Press

He was more than just a hillbilly, more than a baseball player. To millions, he was an authentic folk-hero, oft-remembered and revered, especially among the country folk who spoke his rural twang, mirrored his homespun homor, sensed the small-town values which stirred him.

Few who heard him, or remember his weekly baseball telecasts, will ever forget Ol' Diz, all 300 pounds of him, ambling up the rope ladder to the broadcast booth, stuffing popcorn in one hand and guzzling pop from the other, belting out his rousing trademark ballad, "The Wabash Cannonball."

Dizzy Dean died a year ago this month. Though he had in recent years slipped from the national spotlight, his impact endured, most markedly in the style and legacy of laughter he left behind. His death on July 15 was nationally mourned, a final tribute to the unhip, uncultured Ozark boy.

Immortalized, the subject of prose and verse, Diz became a legend, despite an education which ended in the second grade. "And I wasn't so good in first grade either," he once said.

Dean was a product of his region and times; indeed, he came in time to symbolize them. The son of a migratory cotton picker, he became a hero to the Depression down-trodden, escaping what they had not, living out what they could only dream.

For a memorable period in the mid-1930's he was baseball's greatest pitcher, its most productive gate attraction. The records of that era do not do his life justice. To the end, when he was buried in the small town of Bond, Miss., Dean retained the common touch.

"His philosphy was doing a fellow right," said his brother, Paul, who combined with Diz to form the sport's most famed pitching duos. "He never saw a man he didn't like or respect, and I never saw anyone who didn't respect or like Dizzy."

For Dizzy Dean, the public seldom masked the private. Charitable and flamboyant, unschooled but wise to the ways of the world, for 40 years he was a figure around whom fame fit comfortably.

Few could remain impartial about him. To some, Dean was the supreme braggart and popoff, the unwitting clown. To many more, Ol' Diz was a first-rate showman, a figure of Bunyanesque proportions.

"He was Dizzy Dean, with enormous charm and color and appeal," said Red Barber. "He was smarter than a fox. I think he always knew what he was doing and what he was saying, and I wish I had the money he has made and saved. He has it buried in tomato cans all over Mississippi."

Dean's money did not make him the idol of millions, nor had his pitching feats done it by themselves. What made him so beloved, and so ridiculed by those who disliked him, was his plain and unpolished manner.

Diz pitched for the St. Louis Cardinals during the 1930's, helped make their rollicking Gas House Gang a household word and then became a broadcaster. Stories about him abounded, some more fiction than fact.

One widely circulated yarn about Dean involved Dwight Eisenhower, who asked him one day why Dean had let himself balloon to 300 pounds. "I'll tell you, Mr. President," he is alleged to have said, "For the first 20 years of my life, I never had enough to eat, and I ain't caught up yet."

Another tale concerned an incident 45 years ago. Ignoring curfew, Dean bumped into the Texas League president at 3 a.m. "Good morning, president," Diz is supposed to have said unabashedly. "So the old boy is prowling around by himself, tonight, eh? Well sir, I'm not one to squawk. Us stars and presidents must have our fun."

Then there was the time Dean, born in Lucas, Ark., gave writers different locales as his place of birth. "I was helping the writers out," he said "Them ain't lies; them's scoops."

And who could forget the story of Dean telling writers, hours after he had thrown a three-hitter in the first game of a doubleheader that "If I'd known Daffy Paul Dean was going to pitch a no-hitter in the second game., I would have pitched one, too."

The unadorned manner of the man was even more revealing, especially when he worked as a broadcaster.

He mangled the language so badly that school teachers protested. A new lexicon of baseball terms evolved. To Dean, a runner didn't slide, he "slud." A fielder didn't throw the ball, he "threwed." He would announce, "The runners are now returning to their respectable bases," and laughter would erupt to living rooms across America.

And just as regularly, he's belt out his version of "The Wabash Cannonball."

More so than Ruth or Stengel or Gehrig, Dizzy Dean was pure Americana. That was the essence of his appeal. He spoke of an earlier age; his manner and bearing were of a simpler, less turbulent era.

To be sure, he could be insufferably vain "I may not have been the greatest pitcher ever, but I was amongst 'em," he would say. Part egotist, part gambler, Dean was a man of many dimensions.

The social unrest and sophisticated trends of the 60's and early 70's never affected Dean. "Who the heck is Raquel Welch?" he once asked in total sincerity.

He was an enduring relic. For those who feared that nothing would remain as it had, Dizzy Dean was proof to the contrary.

Just as my father had laughed at his antics on the field, I revered Dean's frolics in the broadcast booth. "He became a legend to thousands of people who didn't know if Dizzy had thrown left-handed or right-handed. And didn't care," announcer Buddy Blattner said.

I like to remember Dizzy as I last heard him, a year before his death. NBC brought him back for its first 1973 Monday night telecast, and he completely dominated regulars Curt Gowdy and Tony Kubek.

Where did Dizzy live, Gowdy asked him.

"Why, In Bond, Mississippi." Where's Bond?

"Oh, 'bout three miles away from Wiggins." Where's Wiggins?

"Oh, 'bout three miles away from Bond," Diz replied.

Only Dean could get away with that. "They'll never be another one like me," he once said. And as was his custom, Dizzy Dean was right.

Education For Garvey From Baseball's Miller

By JEROME HOLTZMAN
(c) Chicago Sun-Times

In the last year or two there have been occasions when I've been tempted to write about Ed Garvey, who is Marvin Miller's counterpart in professional football.

But I have stopped short and haven't mentioned Garvey principally for two reasons: First, I'm a baseball writer and not especially concerned with football, and (2) I don't have a high opinion of Garvey's ability and didn't want to say anything that would be embarrassing to him.

The fact is that I've seen Garvey only once, at a press conference during the pro football players' strike.

And all I can report is that he was remarkably unimpressive. Compared to Miller, Garvey appeared to be a kid in short pants, a schoolboy.

It has occurred to me several times since that Garvey could use an education in player management negotiations and that if he was smart he would spend all his free moments, sitting at Miller's feet and asking Marvin how to do it. Miller probably wouldn't even charge tution.

Author's Opinion

Instead, Garvey sits in his Washington (D.C.) office issuing periodic bulletins to the press, most of which do the pro football players more harm than good.

This is especially so of his most recent pronouncement that the National Football League Players Assn., of which Garvey is the executive director, is $200,000 in debt and doomed without a collective bargaining agreement with the owners.

Garvey was quoted as saying, "We can't go through another year without a contract and survive as a union. We've had to borrow money just to keep the doors open."

Garvey also said the NFLPA was "realistic" in voting that the players should report to the NFL camps this summer; i.e., there would be no player strike this year, as there was last year.

Perhaps Garvey should be commended for his honesty. His union is broke and he is admitting it. But does the poor fellow know what he's doing?

He is telling the owners — worse than that, he is pleading with them — and asking them to come to his aid. He wants them to throw him a bone. Any old contract will do. Just help get us out of debt.

The immediate reaction of the NFL owners probably was one of amusement. That they won the strike, they knew.

But now they can take comfort in the knowledge that they also busted the players' union — a total victory.

Yet if I were an NFL owner I would quickly wipe that smirk off my face and lend Garvey a helping hand, and money, as well.

My view of Garvey's amateurism may be too harsh but he has been so terribly ineffective it is to the owners' advantage to prop him up and keep him in office.

A puppet on a string. And to show their good-faith and goodwill, etc., and more important, enhance Garvey's image with the players as a tough, hard-nosed bargainer, they could even make some minor contractual concessions.

There was a somewhat parallel situation in baseball. The baseball owners, in the spring of 1966, put up a fierce struggle against Marvin Miller.

This was in the days when Miller first surfaced in baseball and was running for election as the executive director of the Major League Baseball Players Assn.

The owners didn't want the players to dump Judge Robert Cannon of Milwaukee as their chief spokesman and negotiator. The owners reasoned that Cannon, compared to Miller, was a veritable patsy. They were right.

Anyway, it is interesting to know that while the football players are insolvent and on the way to the poorhouse, the Major League Baseball Players Assn. has a fat bank book with a balance of $348,000 as of Dec. 31, 1974.

About half of this money is in banks, the other half invested in a variety of treasury securities.

Moreover, the baseball union — since the advent of Miller and attorney Dick Moss — has generated a remarkable amount of money through its licensing program.

In the last eight years the total licensing revenue earned by the association, directly has been $2,225,000 has been funnelled directly into the association in the form of player dues.

In effect, the baseball players don't even have to dig into their pockets for dues because the money for dues has been completely covered by their licensing program.

If the football players never had it so bad, certainly the baseball players never had it so good.

K-State Basketball Escapes Budget Ax

Manhattan, Kan. (AP) — Basketball apparently has escaped the budget cutting ax wielded by the Kansas State University Athletic Council when it set guidelines for the financial support of intercollegiate sports.

"There was no direct cut in the basketball program as such," said Dr. Robert Snell, head of the council.

"This is my own opinion, but I would think that it reflects the success of the basketball program, which has done so on a rather limited budget that has not seen a substantial increase in the past four or five years."

The athletic council met and suggested a cut of $50,000 in the outlay for football, a cut of $2,500 for baseball, apparent total elimination of the $25,000 budget for wrestling, a $6,000 cut for track, $7,000 for golf and $4,000 for tennis.

Gymnastics already had been dropped. There was some indication that golf and tennis also might be eliminated as intercollegiate sports.

The athletic council is to meet Thursday to ratify budgets for the coming academic year.

"The total decrease is a pretty firm number, although the individual numbers or not necessarily exact," Dr. Snell

Kansas State's director of athletics, Ernie Barrett, said: "I would say the figures are very realistic."

The proposed cuts would leave K-State with an intercollegiate athletic budget $1.7 million, the smallest in the Big Eight Conference.

Barrett acknowledged the cuts on wrestling, golf and tennis might eliminate Kansas State as a Big Eight contender in these sports.

"If we can't give them the funds to compete with their opponents, then it would be hard to justify their need," Barrett said.

Barrett said Kansas State is experiencing the economic pinch on intercollegiate athletics a little sooner than some other

As of June 30, the K-State athletic department showed a deficit of $365,000 — accumulated over several years.

It apparently has borrowed $204,000 from advance revenue from fall football tickets to meet expenses.

It is losing $105,000 in residence hall fees and Wildcat Club support which was spread among all sports. Only $100,000 comes from the state treasury.

Golf Title To Hughett

East High 16-year-old Mike Hughett gave the Hillcrest Country Club members a lesson in golf as he grabbed the club championship with a 72-hole total of 291, three over par.

Hughett's score over the two weekend event bettered second place Ed Smith by four strokes.

Bill Bell won the President's Flight with a 306 total, one shot ahead of Dale Wismer.

Besides the medal play in the Championship and President's flight, winners were crowned in match play competition in nine other flights.

Kim's Lad Wins In Kernel Stakes

THE LINCOLN STAR
Sports
Wednesday, July 23, 1975 31

Star Sports Writer

Rodolfo Calderon knew he would have trouble winning with Kim's Lad going only four furlongs.

The colt had a reputation for not breaking very well and the break, obviously, is vitally important in a short sprint. Besides that, Kim's Lad was starting from the outside post position.

"I knew he wouldn't break good because six furlongs is really his best distance," noted Calderon after steering the Frank Bemis-owned speedster to a one-length verdict Tuesday at the State Fairgrounds in the $4,420 Kernel Stakes.

"He really doesn't have the speed at the start," he continued. "But when we got to the quarter-pole he really started moving. The last 50 yards I was really going good. I didn't know he was going to take hold of the track so good."

Perhaps the real secret to Kim's Lad victory was Calderon's expert handling in the race where it seemed the outside post and short distance were actually disadvantages.

Calderon knew he had to get Kim's Lad ready to run quicker than usual.

"That's why I worked him real good before the race. He stood real good in the gate, but he was a little nervous in the paddock. So I knew I'd have to work on him before the race."

That's where an astute ride will make the difference. As usual, Kim's Lad broke fifth in the 10-horse field of 2-year-old colts and geldings. He fell back slightly to sixth down the backstretch, but had improved to third entering the stretch behind pacesetting Red's Mighty Barb.

Then Calderon went to work with Kim's Lad who was pulling away from the field at the wire. Undoubtedly, he was helped by the drying out track which was listed as sloppy.

The OK Farm, Inc's Mount Air, the 4-5 favorite, was never really in contention. The closest he came to the leaders was fourth before fading to finish a beaten sixth.

It was Kim's Lad's first victory since winning a maiden contest at Fonner Park in Grand Island. His last two races produced two seconds at Ak-Sar-Ben over 5½-furlongs.

Overall, his record improved to two triumphs and two seconds in nine outings this year. The $2,652 winner's share boosted his 1975 earnings to $7,848 for his Omaha owner.

As a 9-2 outsider, Kim's Lad returned $11.60, $6.20 and $4.20. Mrs. Howard Synhorst's Red's Mighty Barb, ridden by Fred Ecoffey, placed for $11.40 and $8.00 while Dale Wolff's Quick Bart, ridden by Wayne Anderson, showed for $6.80.

The time was :49 1-5 in the fourth running of the first Lincoln feature for juvenile males.

Record Crowd, Handle

The crowd of 5,936, which wagered $329,049, represented State Fairgrounds' records for a non-opening day Tuesday. In fact, the mutuel handle was $55,982 better than last year's $273,067.

The total Lincoln mutual handle for the first six days of racing is up by 18.69 per cent over a corresponding period of 1974.

Low Double

The Tuesday daily double combining Gordon Moore's Henry S. ($3.40) in the first race with Dave Anderson's Eagle's Son ($5.20) in the second produced the season's lowest daily double.

The 1-2 combination returned a paltry $9.80. The previous low was $11.40.

Two Winners

Riders Louis Duthie and Dan Switzer each recorded two victories.

Duthie scored with the Kansas City Racing Stable's Greekolia ($23.20) in the fourth and on Gary Kelley's Jet Respect ($4.40) in the fifth. Switzer tallied on Frank Chapman's Rep's Bar ($3.80) in the sixth and on the Golden Key Stable's Bishop Brown ($10.00) in the eighth.

Distance Changed

The distance of Tuesday's eighth race at the State Fairgrounds was changed from one mile to one mile and 70 yards because of the muddy conditions of the pullout at the mile pole.

State Fairgrounds' general manager Henry Brandt thanked the horsemen and riders for their cooperation in slightly lengthening the chase for 4-year-olds & up.

"We had no trouble at all in changing the race. Everyone was most cooperative," he said, in adding it was the first distance change in the decade he has been in Lincoln.

Aunt Priscilla Disappointed

I couldn't believe the big crowd that was at the races Tuesday at the State Fairgrounds.

I always thought Tuesday would be a nice quiet day to watch the races, but I guess that cute Henry Brandt is really happy with the big crowds and all the people watching ponies.

Aunt Priscilla Loses $4

I thought I had a winner in the fifth race when Capitol Gal and Jet Respect finished so close. But Capitol Gal lost by just a little bit.

My Mount Air didn't do very well in the feature so I lost $4 for the day. That dropped my $104 spree fund to $111.80.

On Wednesday, I'm going to put my $2 win tickets on Nervewracking in the third and Supreme Son in the fourth.

Lucchesi Shows Godfather Image

ARLINGTON, Tex. (AP) — Frank Joseph Lucchesi, with his salt-and-pepper hair and dark complexion, looks more like a figure out of the movie "Godfather" than the new manager of the Texas Rangers of the American League.

The 49-year-old Lucchesi, a native of San Francisco who now lives in Foster City, Calif., played 13 years in the minor leagues and never got one at bat in the majors.

He good-naturedly kids himself that he played in more towns than "Gone With the Wind."

"Joe Devine (a former New York Yankee scout) told me once that the closest I'd ever get to Yankee Stadium as a player was to see it on a postcard," Lucchesi said with a laugh. "He was right.

"You talk about a man born with a challenge. Every town I went to they would spell my name Lou Casey."

Lucchesi was named manager of the Rangers Monday night after working since 1974 as a third base coach under Billy Martin, who was fired.

"Frank will do a good job," said Martin as he cleaned out his desk. "He's a sound baseball man."

Actually, the 5-foot-8, 180-pound Lucchesi—who admits he could stand to shed a pound or two—didn't do all that bad as a player in the minors. He had a career batting average of .276 in such whistlestop towns as Salem, Ore.; Ventura, Calif.; Twin Falls, S.D.; Thomasville, Ga., and Pine Bluff, Ark.

He was an outfielder with little power, hitting only 36 home runs in 4,231 at bats, an average of about three home runs a year. "I started managing when I was real young, and you can look at my record and see why," Lucchesi said.

His first managing job was at Medford, Ore., in the Far West League in 1951. Lucchesi earned numerous managerial honors in his climb up the ladder to the big leagues.

The peppery Lucchesi was twice manager of the year in the Eastern League, and once each in the Southern Association and Pacific Coast League.

In 1970 he got his big break with the Philadelphia Phillies and managed them to a fifth-place finish. He was ousted in 1972 after two consectutive sixth-place seasons.

Lucchesi's Oklahoma City team came in third in 1973 in the Pacific Coast League.

Luchessi is famed for his arguments with umpires, which can become rib-tickling delights for the spectators.

In one Ranger game this year, Luchessi got on his knees, buried home plate in a pile of dirt and held his hat over his heart in a mock memorial service. Naturally, he was ejected from the contest.

His new third base coach, Jim Piersall, a character himself, reminded Luchessi of himself in Monday night's 6-0 victory over Boston.

"Jim looked like me down there against Boston. But I'll have to give him just an A minus because he got into an argument with an umpire and that's my job now," Luchessi laughed.

Luchessi said his philosophy is simple—"I gamble. I don't play by the book. My whole baseball career has been a challenge and I'm not going to change now."

Saints Obtain Chiefs' Peay

THIBODAUX, La. (AP) — The New Orleans Saints acquired offensive tackle Francis Peay from Kansas City Tuesday for an undisclosed draft choice.

Peay, 31, is a nine-year National Football League veteran. A No 1 draft choice of the New York Giants, the 6-foot-5, 250-pound Peay starred with the Green Bay Packers before being traded to the Chiefs in 1973 and '74.

Two more Saints were felled by minor injuries during Tuesday's practice session. Defensive end Joe Owens was sidelined by a knee sprain that will keep him out about 10 days, and tight end Henry suffered a mild concussion.

AAA Shut Out For Falstaff

Falstaff shut out Racquet Lounge, 5-0 Tuesday in AAA fast pitch softball at Ballard Field.

Rick Boals and Bryce Doebele both had two hits, including one home run apiece and a homer by Tom Novak to pace Falstaff. Lefty Sheary got the win, striking out seven batters.

In the second game, Pizza Hut and Valentinos went 11 innings before Valentinos could send someone around for the 9-8 win. Larry Wright singled in Doug Loos for the winning run. Bob Barrett powered out a home run and a triple.

Regional Post To Gordon

Omaha (UPI) — The former business manager and public relations man for the Omaha Knights' hockey club has been named to a post with the Nebraska Easter Seal Society.

The society said Curt Gordon, Omaha, has been appointed a regional director over the society's program in Cass, Dodge, Sarpy and Washington counties.

The hockey club was disbanded by the parent Atlanta Flames organization last season.

Gordon served with the Knights for nine years. He is a member of the Omaha Sportscasters Association and the Chamber of Commerce's Sports Committee.

Sieckmann 7th In Trans-Miss.

Kansas City — After the two rounds of qualifying play in the Trans-Mississippi Amateur Golf Tournament here Tuesday, Omahan Tom Sieckmann has moved into seventh, three shots off the lead.

Sieckmann repeated his score of 72 for a 144, behind the pace set by Bill Morrill of Fort Worth, Tex., with a 141.

Frank Rose, a former Fairbury native, also duplicated his Monday score of 75 for a 149. The top 63 will move into the match play action Wednesday.

Tourney Games Rescheduled

BEATRICE, Neb. (AP)—Heavy rains which fell over southern Nebraska Monday night and early Tuesday have forced a scheduling change in the 1975 Nebraska Semi Professional Baseball Tournament.

Tuesday night's games were postponed because of wet grounds, and no games are scheduled Wednesday.

The tourney will pick up Thursday night with Doug's Place of Alma facing the Lincoln Pirates, and Beatrice going against Papillion Johns.

The Lincoln club was paced by Doug Johnson and Tom Heuke who scored four goals apiece.

The Lincoln team will compete in the Zone Two qualifying meet in St. Louis this weekend.

K-State Seeks Outside Funds

MANHATTAN, Kan. (AP) — An increased statewide drive for funds to finance men's and women's athletics at Kansas State University was indicated after an administrative meeting Tuesday.

A 30 per cent increase in funding the women's athletic program the next fiscal year at KSU has already been tentatively approved, apparently as a result of the new federal Title IX, which went into effect Monday.

Title IX prohibits sex discrimination in college and university activities, including athletics.

"Kansas State University is not unique in having these problems," Dr. Duane Acker, the new KSU president, said. "They exist nationally. We have problems, but we have too many good things going for us to look any direction but up."

Acker met with fulltime men's coaches, the men's athletic director and the chairman of Kansas State's new intercollegiate athletic council.

The new IAC which came into existence only this summer has been charged by Acker with establishing policy for men's and women's intercollegiate athletics, and with monitoring athletic programs to see that those policies are followed.

In one of its first official actions the IAC ordered a $200,600 reduction in the proposed 1975-76 men's athletic budget in a move toward substantially reducing an accumulated deficit currently estimated at $365,000. The council will meet Thursday to officially approve the $1.76 million men's budget for 1975-76.

Final action on the women's budget is expected Aug. 8. A major share of the men's budget is ticket sales and donations. State appropriations provide only $112,827 for men, and $99,917 for women.

Acker said, "It is essential that our operation be fiscally sound if we are to insure longtime strength of K-State athletics. We have student athletes who are competitive, coaches who are high-type people, fans who give good support, and membership in the Big Eight Conference.

"We will operate the program in a way that will give our student athletics good opportunity to compete, and that will warrant support by students, faculty, alumni and other fans."

Dr. Acker has asked the IAC also to consider:

—Monitoring expenditures on a bi-weekly basis.

—Developing a schedule for paying debts of the men's program to the KSU Endowment Association.

—Coordinating an increasing fund-raising effort within Kansas for both men's and women's athletics.

—The use and financing of the men's athletic dormitory.

Koosman Leads Mets To Victory

By United Press International

Jerry Koosman pitched a six-hitter and stole the first base of his career Tuesday night when the New York Mets defeated the Cincinnati Reds 3-1.

Koosman walked four and struck out eight in raising his record to 9-7 while Jack Billingham suffered his fifth loss against 10 wins.

With New York ahead 1-0, Koosman singled to lead off the third and then stole second and went to third on Bill Plummer's throwing error. He scored on Wayne Garrett's sacrifice fly.

Greg Luzinski scored the only run of the game on a wild throw by catcher Vic Correll as the Philadelphia Phillies beat the Atlanta Braves 1-0. Steve Carlton pitched a three-hitter and struck out eight to make his record 9-7.

Jay Johnstone led off the ninth with an infield single and Luzinski and Dick Allen walked. Mike Schmidt popped out and Johnny Oates grounded into a forceout at the plate but Correll's throw to first for an attempted double play was wild and Luzinski skored.

Gary Carter singled in the winning run with one out in the 11th inning giving the Montreal Expos a 2-1 triumph over the Houston Astros. Dale Murray pitched one inning of relief to win his fourth game for the Expos.

Johnny Grubb tripled and scored the only run of the game on Tito Fuentes' single to give the San Diego Padres a 1-0 win over the Pittsburgh Pirates in an early-ending West Coast game. Randy Jones pitched a seven-hitter for his fifth shutout and 12th win of the season while Bruce Kison was the loser.

City Offers Baseball For The 'In-Betweens'

By KEN HAMBLETON
Star Sports Writer

You really want to play baseball. But you're too old for Little Chiefs and not good enough for American Legion baseball. So where do you go?

Well, Lincolnite Don Hobbs has something for everyone in that predicament. Hobbs is the director of the Lincoln Parks and Recreation Boys Baseball program and anybody can join.

"We try to serve the in-between group. That is the group of youngsters that don't make the Legion teams, are too old for Little Chiefs and too young for the Capital City League," said Hobbs, the league director for the past six years.

"We have 12 districts and four teams per district. Each team is for a different age group," Hobbs explained. The A division is for 14-15-year-olds; B for 13-14 year-olds, C for 13-year-olds and the D for kids 10-12-years-old.

The league started sometime back in the 1930s in Lincoln but really got going in the early 1950s according to Hobbs. "We took a kind of slump when the legion program started in the 60s. And the top players in our league started to go to the Legion program," Hobbs said. "But a lot of kids just don't develop quick enough to participate in that program."

More than 560 boys play in the Recreation league now and according to Hobbs the interest is constantly growing.

"We're just trying to provide something for as large a group of boys that we can," Hobbs said. "our games are in the afternoon, and the kids play twice a week, with one day of practice."

"More instruction and better instruction are two of our main goals," Hobbs added. "All of our coaches have either played or are currently playing baseball. So we aren't really looking for parent participation. And that's a big difference between our league and others."

Hobbs, who has been involved with the program since 1956, when he started coaching, feels that the city league provides a lot of pluses.

"We are offering top notch instruction and an opportunity for a large group of boys to have fun with baseball. And we help keep a kid in baseball that otherwise might have quit, because he maybe wasn't good enough for the other leagues," Hobbs said. "But we also have a number of talented kids that have gone on to play high school baseball or Legion baseball the year after playing with us."

"A lot of our kids go out to Sherman Field, and see how good the Legion players are, and want to join that league some day," Hobbs noted. "So they come to us with the idea of learning the game and the skills involved."

Hobbs also noted one of the other benefits of the league is that it provides jobs for the Legion baseball players. "We hire the Legion players for our umpires, so we have impartiality."

"If we can make the game more enjoyable for a large group of kids and have a bit of fun in doing it, then we have reached our goals," Hobbs concluded.

Bitter Tracts Oppose Gandhi

By EDWARD CODY

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Political activists outraged at Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's curbs on democracy are publishing bitter underground tracts accusing her of turning India into a dictatorship.

One clandestine sheet was reliably reported Tuesday to reflect an organized effort to stir active resistance to Mrs. Gandhi. It outlined a four-point program to spread revolt across the country and disrupt her administration.

Informed sources said it was put together by second-level leaders of opposition parties whose chiefs — including members of parliament — had been thrown in jail under Mrs. Gandhi's political crackdown.

The driving force is a top trade union leader with ties to the more radical of India's two Communist parties, the sources added. He has long been a foe of Mrs. Gandhi and her Congress party government.

It is impossible to judge how widely the mimeographed calls to revolt are being circulated, or whether the frightened Indian opposition will listen. The tracts provide another indication that beneath the calm forced on India by Mrs. Gandhi's tactics, resentment is boiling.

An underground newspaper is being circulated even in Bihar state by followers of jailed opposition leader Jayaprakash Narayan, sources from that eastern state said. Only two weeks ago Narayan's home state disciples were still shocked into inaction by Mrs. Gandhi's June 26 roundup of their leaders.

"A fascist dictatorship has been clamped on our land," charges the most polished of the tracts, reflecting an organizing effort under the Communist union leaders allied with veteran opposition operatives. "In fact, there is no rule of law any more. The fundamental rights have been crushed under the high heel of Mrs. Gandhi's dictatorial boot."

It warns leaders of opposition political parties excluded from Mrs. Gandhi's recent ban on extreme right and left groups that she will not long tolerate their existence. For that reason, it urges all opposition groups to bury their differences for a common fight against Mrs. Gandhi's stay in power.

"This is not to say that we should right away disband our parties because their existence has now become obsolete," it said. "On the contrary, the cadres of the parties should be mobilized at once to involve them and the masses under their influence in whatever form of struggle may be possible at the local level.

"The censorship of news and the total blackout on the radio will come in the way of any coordination being achieved, but that is how it is in all dictatorships."

To get the resistance moving, the tract urges:

— Underground newspapers to provoke the people and counter government reports.

— Strikes and protest demonstrations.

— Wall posters inciting resistance.

— Whispering campaigns to circulate rumors, even if unproved, about Narayan fasting in jail, sabotage on railroad lines and other antigovernment agitation.

"We start a whispering campaign and see that it goes right across the country" it adds. "We rouse emotions of the people on the basis of the statement that we believe to be true."

"Be vigilant against agents provocateurs and police touts," the tract warned. "Let all the democratic student organizations organize immediately to work unitedly."

It is signed: "The Resistance."

Another underground publication issued under the name of Jyotirmoy Bosu, a Marxist member of parliament reliably reported to be among thousands of persons jailed under emergency rules, urges President Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed to rescind the decree.

Ahmed, as head of state, officially signed the emergency proclamation. But Mrs. Gandhi, as government leader and India's effective ruler, made the decision, based on what she said was a threat to internal security.

ROBERT WISE . . . leaves Lincoln Memorial in arms of the law.

Honest Abe Lapsitter Leaves—With A Fight

WASHINGTON (AP) — An early-morning visitor to the Lincoln Memorial found Honest Abe's lap so inviting that he climbed right up — and then refused to leave without a fight.

And while the imposing marble statue survived the instrusion unscathed, several of the police officers who eventually led the offender away weren't so lucky. Three had to be treated at a clinic for "sprains, abrasions, contusions and one bite," and each will be out of action for a week, an official said.

U.S. Park Police said Robert Wise, 18, of Falls Church, Va., skinnied the 15 feet up the statue's legs at about 5:15 a.m. Tuesday while the sole guard on duty was walking his rounds elsewhere on the monument grounds. Wise came down about 45 minutes later after cajoling by a half dozen officers, then began swinging, according to the police account.

A National Capital Parks official, Mary Krug, said no criminal charges were filed but Wise was taken to St. Elizabeth's Hospital for mental tests.

Said one police officer: "Routine, just routine. Happens every once in awhile."

Peron Advised To Quit

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Left-wing Peronists demanded President Isabel Peron's resignation Tuesday as a power struggle grew more heated within the massive party once led by the late Juan D. Peron.

"This government is not Peronist," said newspaper ads signed by the leftist, self-styled "authentic" Peronist party. The ads asked that Peron's widow step down from the presidency, to which she succeeded on her husband's death, and that authorities call new presidential elections.

Right-wing Peronist Youth, a hard core of Mrs. Peron's diminishing following, said, "Anyone who touches Isabel (Peron) will be answered with bloody execution." It charged that "gorilla sectors in the armed forces are preparing a coup in complicity with Yankee imperialism."

The charges came as the 44-year-old president, shaken and ill after four weeks of crisis in her government, met with Sen. Italo Luder, leader of the senate and next in line for the presidency, at her residence.

Mrs. Peron reorganized her cabinet Monday and Tuesday for the third time in two months under pressure from the armed forces, the nation's vast labor movement and Peronist congressmen.

Pedro Bonanni, treasury minister for Juan Peron from 1952-57, was sworn in Tuesday as the nation's fourth economy minister in 10 months.

Many critics claimed the reorganization did not go far enough and noted that the new social welfare minister, Rodolfo Roballos, was previously an aide of the controversial Jose Lopez Rega.

Lopez Rega, Mrs. Peron's former private secretary and welfare officer, hastened to Europe over the weekend under what one government critic, the newspaper La Opinion, called direct military pressure.

Also appointed Monday was Jose Stupenengo in the key press secretary's spot.

Lopez Rega, who most political and labor groups said brought on the recent month of crises, reportedly said in Madrid that he was sick with diabetes and went to Juan Peron's former mansion for rest.

Hoffman Named To Head Army

WASHINGTON (AP) — Martin R. Hoffmann of McLean, Va., who has been general counsel of the Defense Department, was nominated Tuesday by President Ford to be secretary of the Army.

Hoffmann, 43, who has served in a number of government posts and at one time was legal counsel to Sen. Charles H. Percy, R-Ill., was nominated to succeed Howard H. "Bo." Callaway.

Callaway resigned as Army secretary July 3 to become campaign manager for Ford's presidential bid in 1976.

Cutback Announced In Ammunition Production

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Army announced a sharp cutback in ammunition production Tuesday and said more than 12,000 employes will be laid off as a result.

"The reduction of ammunition production is a direct result of the end of hostilities in Southeast Asia and the fact that American stockpiles are rapidly approaching authorized levels," the announcement said.

Affected will be 14 Army ammunition plants and 32 commercial manufacturers in 19 states.

The 12,000 government and contractor employes who are expected to lose their jobs represent nearly one-third of the work force now engaged in production of Army ammunition of small arms, mortars, tanks and artillery.

About $90 million in contracts will be canceled as a result of what the Army called a "significant reduction" in ammunition production beginning in the next two weeks.

Another $290 million already appropriated by Congress for ammunition will be assigned to other purposes, an Army spokesman said.

Three Army ammunition plants will be mothballed over the next nine months and three others are being studied for possible mothballing. Eight plants will cut back their production, the Army said.

A 15th plant, the Volunteer Army Ammunition Plant in Tennessee, already is operating on a reduced basis, the Army said.

The Army owns 26 ammunition plants which are run by private contractors. Eleven of them already are on a standby basis.

In even of a national emergency, the Army said, the mothballed plants could be brought back into production within four months.

Although the Army has been out of Vietnam for more than two years, it said "it took some time . . . to assess the Army's readiness posture and identified procurements that may have been in long supply."

Due to be mothballed are the Riverback Army Ammunition Plant in California, the Joliet plant at Elwood, Ill., and the Longhorn plant at Marshall, Tex.

Those being studied for possible standby are the Kansas army ammunition plant at Parsons, the Scranton plant in Pennsylvania and the Donovan Projectile Facility, part of the Twin Cities plant at New Brighton, Minn.

Plants scheduled for reduced production are the Indiana Army ammunition plant at Charlestown, the Iowa plant at Burlington, the Louisiana plant at Shreveport, the Lake City plant at Independence, Mo., the Lone Star plant at Texarkana, Tex., the Radford plant in Virginia, the Holston plant at Kingsport, Tenn., and the Milan plant in Tennessee.

The six states in which private manufacturers will suffer loss of business are Florida, Massachusetts, Michigan, Nebraska, New Jersey and New York. The Army did not list the 32 commercial manufacturers involved.

Governors See Double Cross In Health Act

CINCINNATI, Ohio (AP) — Governors attending the Midwestern Governors Conference here Tuesday accused Congress of double crossing the states in the new National Health Planning and Resources Development Act.

A resolution offered by Missouri Gov. Christopher S. Bond said that while the governors generally agree with the intent of the law, its provisions "negate the original intent of this law, as well as the basic concepts of public accountability through locally elected officials."

The act was set up to organize regional health planning systems throughout the United States.

The governors planned to vote Wednesday on the resolution which calls for scrapping of population limits of 500,000 in Health Service Areas, forcing many across state lines. The resolution also calls for rolling back the time limit to implement the program and removing the veto power of the Bureau of Health Planning and Resources Development of the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Iowa Gov. Robert D. Ray, chairman of the National Governors Conference, expressed doubt about the need for the law.

"Once the states started doing something in the area of providing health planning care, the federal government moved in and took it away," said the Iowa Republican.

Eugene Rubel, acting director of the bureau of health planning and resources, disputed Ray's claim. The intent, Rubel said, was to do something in the way of providing health care for all citizens because not enough had been done in the private sector.

On the subject of energy, William Watt, assistant to Indiana Gov. Otis Bowen, presented a resolution calling for deregulation for five years of prices at the well head for new gas development plus tax incentives to put profits back into exploration.

Another resolution called for continuation of federal fuel oil and gasoline regulations.

Nebraska Gov. J. James Exon recommended that the energy task force pursue development of wood alcohol taken from wheat as a possible source of energy.

Dr. Ronald Powers, chairman of the land use task force, said there has been little study on land use for the future. He recommended a study in the Midwest, but added that present agricultural acreage should be sufficient through the year 2000 in that part of the country.

James M. Cannon, presidential assistant for domestic affairs, told the governors that the Ford Administration is "an open administration." He said all suggestions and complaints by the governors would be given serious consideration.

"Our concern is to establish the best kind of consultation process possible to enable the states and you as governors to be more directly involved in the decision making process in Washington," Cannon said.

Cannon preceded the appearance of Vice President Nelson Rockefeller at Tuesday's session.

Woman Harbors 51 Dogs

Coffeyville, Kan. (AP) — Hazel Coffey and Coffeyville do not appreciate each other's regard for dogs.

She said she can't live without her canine companions and they can't live without her. She wants to sell her home and move to California with the dogs — all 51.

At the request of the county attorney, Montgomery County District Judge David Scott issued a restraining order that gives her 10 days to get rid of 48 of the animals.

Authorities discovered the menagerie at the home of the 71-year-old woman when they responded to neighbors' complaints nearly two weeks ago.

In August 1972 Mrs. Coffey was fined $150 and given a 30-day suspended jail sentence for harboring unregistered dogs and operating a kennel without a license. Officers said at the time they found 115 dogs at her home, a garage and a nearby vacant house.

Marijuana Plane Lands; 7 Arrested

VICKSBURG, Miss. (AP) — Seven persons were arrested and 2,210 pounds of marijuana worth about $217,000 were confiscated after a plane made a suspicious landing at the Vicksburg airport, the county sheriff said Tuesday.

Warren County Sheriff Paul Barrett said the seven were charged with possession of marijuana with intent to deliver it, a felony.

It was the seventh incident in recent months involving airplanes transporting marijuana, authorities said.

Barrett said a guard at the Vicksburg airport spotted a twin-engine airplane pulling to the end of the runway after landing late Monday night. He said the guard watched as the sacks were unloaded and the plane took off.

"The guard called me and said it looked like something funny going on at the airport," Barrett said.

He identified four of those arrested as Mary Constance Cruikshank, 26, of Chicago; M.D. Johnson, 49, of Rolling Fork, Miss.; Kenneth Erwin Wetzel, 48, of Truth or Consequences, N.M.; and Charles Brown, 25, of Port Gibson, Miss.

"We are holding one more unidentified suspect and two persons were arrested (Monday afternoon) at the Jackson airport while attempting to catch a flight out of town," Barrett said.

He said those arrested were being held on $500,000 bond pending a hearing on the drug charge.

300 Albuquerque Policemen Return To Work

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — "I'm back, but I'm not happy," said one of about 300 officers who returned to work Tuesday ending a 10-day police strike.

Other returning officers said they were satisfied with their new money package but unhappy about the city negotiation effort and the demotion of seven sergeants who had joined the striking patrolmen.

"The city has a police department, but they've taken away its pride and damaged its effectiveness," said president Don Collins of the Albuquerque Police Officers Association.

The seven, who were demoted to patrolmen for four months at which time their status will be reviewed, urged acceptance of the pact.

"I can live with it; why can't you?" former Sgt. Jim Seifert asked strikers before Monday night's 303-125 vote to accept the contract.

Many patrolmen were disgruntled about the action against the sergeants, two of whom were walking downtown beats on Tuesday.

"If we hadn't got the segeants to stand up and tell the people to vote for it, it wouldn't have passed," said one officer.

Federal mediator Lowell McGinnis said, "There was a lot of real deep feeling about the sergeants."

Wayne Crowell, another former sergeant, said, "If I didn't feel that we could still hold this department together by our actions, I wouldn't have helped sell the package."

The two-year agreement that ended the strike provides an across-the board 8 per cent pay raise in addition to 4 per cent merit increases due about 75 per cent of the force; a $30-a-month tax exempt uniform allowance increase, up to $50 a month; a Christmas 1976 bonus equal to 6 per cent of an officer's salary during the preceding six-month period; and reinstatement of the 313 officers who resigned last week in the middle of the strike.

Negotiators said the pay increase and benefits amounted to an 11 per cent increase. Officers demanded a 12 per cent hike in addition to merit pay. The city had been offering an 8 per cent hike.

Tree Trimmer Dies In Omaha

A Lincoln tree trimming business owner died Tuesday afternoon in Omaha when he fell from a tree he was cutting, according to Omaha police.

John Morris, 53, owner of John Morris Tree Service, was killed from the fall from a tree at 505 Happy Hollow Blvd. Morris had been a Lincoln resident 29 years.

He is survived by his wife Grace, three sons, and three daughters. Funeral services are pending.

Rural Lincolnite Injured By Prop

Diving over the side of a motor boat to retrieve a ski rope earned Daniel Vavrana, 24, Route 1, a trip to the hospital Tuesday afternoon.

Vavrana suffered several lacerations and a fracture to his foot when his foot struck the boat's propeller. He had jumped from the boat to recover a tow line while the craft was towing a skier around Capital Beach.

He was listed in fair condition at Lincoln General Hospital.

Gal Misses 300 Game

It started out to be one of those bad nights for Lettie Evans Monday at Plaza Bowl. But it turned out to be one of the good ones instead.

Evans struggled through her first game with no spares, several splits and a couple of strikes until her husband, Mike, showed her a line to bowl over.

Once instructed, Lettie couldn't and didn't miss for 14 consecutive strikes — the last five of her first game and the first nine frames of her second.

With the nine straight to open the second game, she had a chance at 300, something no Lincoln woman bowler has accomplished in league play, but pulled her first shot in the tenth frame high, leaving split and settling for a 265 game.

"Since I got 14 strikes in-a-row, I wasn't as disappointed as I would have been if I'd had nine and missed because I know now I can get 12 in-a-row," she said.

"I wasn't really nervous in the tenth frame until I suddenly realized that nobody else was bowling," she added. "I thought to myself, 'If everybody's watching, I've just got to at least hit the head pin,' — and I did," she said ruefully.

As it turned out the 265 game was two pins short of her best, a 267 shot this summer in the Friday morning league, also at Plaza.

Bowling on the same pair of lanes, opposing anchor person Jocelyn Baade recorded a 253 score the following game.

"When you're bowling against Lettie, what else can you do?" laughed Jocelyn.

East Hills Tankers Win

The East Hills Alligators, a newly-formed Lincoln swim team, splashed to its initial win of the season over the weekend.

Led by wins from Mary Naviaux, Tom Naviaux, Tom Focht and Jane Raglin, the Alligators scored 286 points to down Belmont who finished second with 230.5 points while Eden's team was third with 218 5.

Morning Briefing

FOOTBALL

New leadership in football contract talks don't seem to be helping. New president of the NFL Players' Association Kermit Alexander and Sargent Karch, new executive director of the management council and spokesman for the owners' group, were in on last year's talks which led to the strike. No agreements have yet been reached.

The trade that sent Marv Fleming to the Washington Redskins and Charley Harraway to the Miami Dolphins may be called off if neither athlete reports to his respective camp. The Redskins also announced that Roosevelt Taylor retired after

Folk-Hero Dean Sparkled With Homespun Wit

EDITORS NOTE: A year ago this week, Dizzy Dean, one of baseball's most colorful characters, died. In the following article, a former reporter remembers some of the incidents which endeared Dean to millions.

By CURT SMITH
For The Associated Press

He was more than just a hillbilly, more than a baseball player. To millions, he was an authentic folk-hero, oft-remembered and revered, especially among the country folk who spoke his rural twang, mirrored his homespun homor, sensed the small-town values which stirred him.

Few who heard him, or remember his weekly baseball telecasts, will ever forget Ol' Diz, all 300 pounds of him, ambling up the rope ladder to the broadcast booth, stuffing popcorn in one hand and guzzling pop from the other, belting out his rousing trademark ballad, "The Wabash Cannonball."

Dizzy Dean died a year ago this month. Though he had in recent years slipped from the national spotlight, his impact endured, most markedly in the style and legacy of laughter he left behind. His death on July 15 was nationally mourned, a final tribute to the unhip, uncultured Ozark boy.

Immortalized, the subject of prose and verse, Diz became a legend, despite an education which ended in the second grade. "And I wasn't so good in first grade either," he once said.

Dean was a product of his region and times; indeed, he came in time to symbolize them. The son of a migratory cotton picker, he became a hero to the Depression downtrodden, escaping what they had not, living out what they could only dream.

For a memorable period in the mid-1930's he was baseball's greatest pitcher, its most productive gate attraction. The records of that era do not do his life justice. To the end, when he was buried in the small town of Bond, Miss., Dean retained the common touch.

"His philosphy was doing a fellow right," said his brother, Paul, who combined with Diz to form the sport's most famed pitching duos. "He never saw a man he didn't like or respect, and I never saw anyone who didn't respect or like Dizzy."

For Dizzy Dean, the public seldom masked the private. Charitable and flamboyant, unschooled but wise to the ways of the world, for 40 years he was a figure around whom fame fit comfortably.

Few could remain impartial about him. To some, Dean was the supreme braggart and popoff, the unwitting clown. To many more, Ol' Diz was a first-rate showman, a figure of Bunyanesque proportions.

"He was Dizzy Dean, with enormous charm and color and appeal," said Red Barber. "He was smarter than a fox. I think he always knew what he was doing and what he was saying, and I wish I had the money he has made and saved. He has it buried in tomato cans all over Mississippi."

Dean's money did not make him the idol of millions, nor had his pitching feats done it by themselves. What made him so beloved, and so ridiculed by those who disliked him, was his plain and unpolished manner.

Diz pitched for the St. Louis Cardinals during the 1930's, helped make their rollicking Gas House Gang a household word and then became a broadcaster. Stories about him abounded, some more fiction than fact.

One widely circulated yarn about Dean involved Dwight Eisenhower, who asked him one day why Dean had let himself balloon to 300 pounds. "I'll tell you, Mr. President," he is alleged to have said, "For the first 20 years of my life, I never had enough to eat, and I ain't caught up yet."

Another tale concerned an incident 45 years ago. Ignoring curfew, Dean bumped into the Texas League president at 3 a.m. "Good morning, president," Diz is supposed to have said unabashedly. "So the old boy is prowling around by himself, tonight, eh? Well sir, I'm not one to squawk. Us stars and presidents must have our fun."

Then there was the time Dean, born in Lucas, Ark., gave writers different locales as his place of birth. "I was helping the writers out," he said "Them ain't lies; them's scoops."

And who could forget the story of Dean telling writers, hours after he had thrown a three-hitter in the first game of a doubleheader that "If I'd known Daffy Paul Dean was going to pitch a no-hitter in the second game., I would have pitched one, too."

The unadorned manner of the man was even more revealing, especially when he worked as a broadcaster.

He mangled the language so badly that school teachers protested. A new lexicon of baseball terms evolved. To Dean, a runner didn't slide, he "slud." A fielder didn't throw the ball, he "threwed." He would announce, "The runners are now returning to their respectable bases," and laughter would erupt to living rooms across America.

And just as regularly, he's belt out his version of "The Wabash Cannonball."

More so than Ruth or Stengel or Gehrig, Dizzy Dean was pure Americana. That was the essence of his appeal. He spoke of an earlier age; his manner and bearing were of a simpler, less turbulent era.

To be sure, he could be insufferably vain "I may not have been the greatest pitcher ever, but I was amongst 'em," he would say. Part egotist, part gambler, Dean was a man of many dimensions.

The social unrest and sophisticated trends of the 60's and early 70's never affected Dean. "Who the heck is Raquel Welch?" he once asked in total sincerity.

He was an enduring relic. For those who feared that nothing would remain as it had, Dizzy Dean was proof to the contrary.

Just as my father had laughed at his antics on the field, I revered Dean's frolics in the broadcast booth. "He became a legend to thousands of people who didn't know if Dizzy had thrown left-handed or right-handed. And didn't care," announcer Buddy Blattner said.

I like to remember Dizzy as I last heard him, a year before his death. NBC brought him back for its first 1973 Monday night telecast, and he completely dominated regulars Curt Gowdy and Tony Kubek.

Where did Dizzy live, Gowdy asked him.

"Why, In Bond, Mississippi." Where's Bond?

"Oh, 'bout three miles away from Wiggins." Where's Wiggins?

"Oh, 'bout three miles away from Bond," Diz replied.

Only Dean could get away with that. "They'll never be another one like me," he once said. And as was his custom, Dizzy Dean was right.

Education For Garvey From Baseball's Miller

By JEROME HOLTZMAN
(c) Chicago Sun-Times

In the last year or two there have been occasions when I've been tempted to write about Ed Garvey, who is Marvin Miller's counterpart in professional football.

But I have stopped short and haven't mentioned Garvey principally for two reasons: First, I'm a baseball writer and not especially concerned with football, and (2) I don't have a high opinion of Garvey's ability and didn't want to say anything that would be embarrassing to him.

The fact is that I've seen Garvey only once, at a press conference during the pro football players' strike.

And all I can report is that he was remarkably unimpressive. Compared to Miller, Garvey appeared to be a kid in short pants, a schoolboy.

It has occurred to me several times since that Garvey could use an education in player management negotiations and that if he was smart he would spend all his free moments, sitting at Miller's feet and asking Marvin how to do it. Miller probably wouldn't even charge tution.

Author's Opinion

Instead, Garvey sits in his Washington (D.C.) office issuing periodic bulletins to the press, most of which do the pro football players more harm than good.

This is especially so of his most recent pronouncement that the National Football League Players Assn., of which Garvey is the executive director, is $200,000 in debt and doomed without a collective bargaining agreement with the owners.

Garvey was quoted as saying, "We can't go through another year without a contract and survive as a union. We've had to borrow money just to keep the doors open."

Garvey also said the NFLPA was "realistic" in voting that the players should report to the NFL camps this summer; i.e., there would be no player strike this year, as there was last year.

Perhaps Garvey should be commended for his honesty. His union is broke and he is admitting it. But does the poor fellow know what he's doing?

He is telling the owners — worse than that, he is pleading with them — and asking them to come to his aid. He wants them to throw him a bone. Any old contract will do. Just help get us out of debt.

The immediate reaction of the NFL owners probably was one of amusement. That they won the strike, they knew.

But now they can take comfort in the knowledge that they also busted the players' union — a total victory.

Yet if I were an NFL owner I would quickly wipe that smirk off my face and lend Garvey a helping hand, and money, as well.

My view of Garvey's amateurism may be too harsh but he has been so terribly ineffective it is to the owners' advantage to prop him up and keep him in office.

A puppet on a string. And to show their good-faith and goodwill, etc., and more important, enhance Garvey's image with the players as a tough, hard-nosed bargainer, they could even make some minor contractual concessions.

There was a somewhat parallel situation in baseball. The baseball owners, in the spring of 1966, put up a fierce struggle against Marvin Miller.

This was in the days when Miller first surfaced in baseball and was running for election as the executive director of the Major League Baseball Players Assn.

The owners didn't want the players to dump Judge Robert Cannon of Milwaukee as their chief spokesman and negotiator. The owners reasoned that Cannon, compared to Miller, was a veritable patsy. They were right.

Anyway, it is interesting to know that while the football players are insolvent and on the way to the poorhouse, the Major League Baseball Players Assn. has a fat bank book with a balance of $348,000 as of Dec. 31, 1974.

About half of this money is in banks, the other half invested in a variety of treasury securities.

Moreover, the baseball union — since the advent of Miller and attorney Dick Moss — has generated a remarkable amount of money through its licensing program.

In the last eight years the total licensing revenue earned by the association, directly has been $2,225,000 has been funnelled directly into the association in the form of player dues.

In effect, the baseball players don't even have to dig into their pockets for dues because the money for dues has been completely covered by their licensing program.

If the football players never had it so bad, certainly the baseball players never had it so good.

K-State Basketball Escapes Budget Ax

Manhattan, Kan. (AP) — Basketball apparently has escaped the budget cutting ax wielded by the Kansas State University Athletic Council when it set guidelines for the financial support of intercollegiate sports.

"There was no direct cut in the basketball program as such," said Dr. Robert Snell, head of the council.

"This is my own opinion, but I would think that it reflects the success of the basketball program, which has done so on a rather limited budget that has not seen a substantial increase in the past four or five years."

The athletic council met and suggested a cut of $50,000 in the outlay for football, a cut of $2,500 for baseball, apparent total elimination of the $25,000 budget for wrestling, a $6,000 cut for track, $7,000 for golf and $4,000 for tennis.

Gymnastics already had been dropped. There was some indication that golf and tennis also might be eliminated as intercollegiate sports.

The athletic council is to meet Thursday to ratify budgets for the coming academic year.

"The total decrease is a pretty firm number, although the individual numbers or not necessarily exact," Dr. Snell

Kansas State's director of athletics, Ernie Barrett, said: "I would say the figures are very realistic."

The proposed cuts would leave K-State with an intercollegiate athletic budget $1.7 million, the smallest in the Big Eight Conference.

Barrett acknowledged the cuts on wrestling, golf and tennis might eliminate Kansas State as a Big Eight contender in these sports.

"If we can't give them the funds to compete with their opponents, then it would be hard to justify their need," Barrett said.

Barrett said Kansas State is experiencing the economic pinch on intercollegiate athletics a little sooner than some other

As of June 30, the K-State athletic department showed a deficit of $365,000 — accumulated over several years.

It apparently has borrowed $204,000 from advance revenue from fall football tickets to meet expenses.

It is losing $105,000 in residence hall fees and Wildcat Club support which was spread among all sports. Only $100,000 comes from the state treasury.

Golf Title To Hughett

East High 16-year-old Mike Hughett gave the Hillcrest Country Club members a lesson in golf as he grabbed the club championship with a 72-hole total of 291, three over par.

Hughett's score over the two weekend event bettered second place Ed Smith by four strokes.

Bill Bell won the President's Flight with a 306 total, one shot ahead of Dale Wismer.

Besides the medal play in the Championship and President's flight, winners were crowned in match play competition in nine other flights.

Bitter Tracts Oppose Gandhi

By EDWARD CODY

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Political activists outraged at Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's curbs on democracy are publishing bitter underground tracts accusing her of turning India into a dictatorship.

One clandestine sheet was reliably reported Tuesday to reflect an organized effort to stir active resistance to Mrs. Gandhi. It outlined a four-point program to spread revolt across the country and disrupt her administration.

Informed sources said it was put together by second-level leaders of opposition parties whose chiefs — including members of parliament — had been thrown in jail under Mrs. Gandhi's political crackdown.

The driving force is a top trade union leader with ties to the more radical of India's two Communist parties, the sources added. He has long been a foe of Mrs. Gandhi and her Congress party government.

It is impossible to judge how widely the mimeographed calls to revolt are being circulated, or whether the frightened Indian opposition will listen. The tracts provide another indication that beneath the calm forced on India by Mrs. Gandhi's tactics, resentment is boiling.

An underground newspaper is being circulated even in Bihar state by followers of jailed opposition leader Jayaprakash Narayan, sources from that eastern state said. Only two weeks ago Narayan's home state disciples were still shocked into inaction by Mrs. Gandhi's June 26 roundup of their leaders.

"A fascist dictatorship has been clamped on our land," charges the most polished of the tracts, reflecting an organizing effort under the Communist union leaders allied with veteran opposition operatives. "In fact, there is no rule of law any more. The fundamental rights have been crushed under the high heel of Mrs. Gandhi's dictatorial boot."

It warns leaders of opposition political parties excluded from Mrs. Gandhi's recent ban on extreme right and left groups that she will not long tolerate their existence. For that reason, it urges all opposition groups to bury their differences for a common fight against Mrs. Gandhi's stay in power.

"This is not to say that we should right away disband our parties because their existence has now become obsolete," it said. "On the contrary, the cadres of the parties should be mobilized at once to involve them and the masses under their influence in whatever form of struggle may be possible at the local level.

"The censorship of news and the total blackout on the radio will come in the way of any coordination being achieved, but that is how it is in all dictatorships."

To get the resistance moving, the tract urges:

— Underground newspapers to provoke the people and counter government reports.

— Strikes and protest demonstrations.

— Wall posters inciting resistance.

— Whispering campaigns to circulate rumors, even if unproved, about Narayan fasting in jail, sabotage on railroad lines and other antigovernment agitation.

"We start a whispering campaign and see that it goes right across the country" it adds. "We rouse emotions of the people on the basis of the statement that we believe to be true."

Students at New Delhi's Jawaharlal Nehru University—named after Mrs. Gandhi's father — accused the government in a one-page underground report of trying to suppress student organizations linked to opposition groups.

"Be vigilant against agents provocateurs and police touts," the tract warned. "Let all the democratic student organizations organize immediately to work unitedly."

It is signed: "The Resistance."

Another underground publication issued under the name of Jyotirmoy Bosu, a Marxist member of parliament reliably reported to be among thousands of persons jailed under emergency rules, urges President Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed to rescind the decree.

Ahmed, as head of state, officially signed the emergency proclamation. But Mrs. Gandhi, as government leader and India's effective ruler, made the decision, based on what she said was a threat to internal security.

ROBERT WISE . . . leaves Lincoln Memorial in arms of the law.

Honest Abe Lapsitter Leaves—With A Fight

WASHINGTON (AP) — An early-morning visitor to the Lincoln Memorial found Honest Abe's lap so inviting that he climbed right up — and then refused to leave without a fight.

And while the imposing marble statue survived the instrusion unscathed, several of the police officers who eventually led the offender away weren't so lucky. Three had to be treated at a clinic for "sprains, abrasions, contusions and one bite," and each will be out of action for a week, an official said.

U S Park Police said Robert Wise, 18, of Falls Church, Va , skinnied the 15 feet up the statue's legs at about 5:15 a.m. Tuesday while the sole guard on duty was walking his rounds elsewhere on the monument grounds. Wise came down about 45 minutes later after cajoling by a half dozen officers, then began swinging, according to the police account.

A National Capital Parks official, Mary Krug, said no criminal charges were filed but Wise was taken to St. Elizabeth's Hospital for mental tests.

Said one police officer: "Routine, just routine. Happens every once in awhile."

Peron Advised To Quit

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Left-wing Peronists demanded President Isabel Peron's resignation Tuesday as a power struggle grew more heated within the massive party once led by the late Juan D. Peron.

"This government is not Peronist," said newspaper ads signed by the leftist, self-styled "authentic" Peronist party. The ads asked that Peron's widow step down from the presidency, to which she succeeded on her husband's death, and that authorities call new presidential elections.

Right-wing Peronist Youth, a hard core of Mrs. Peron's diminishing following, said, "Anyone who touches Isabel (Peron) will be answered with bloody execution." It charged that "gorilla sectors in the armed forces are preparing a coup in complicity with Yankee imperialism."

The charges came as the 44-year-old president, shaken and ill after four weeks of crisis in her government, met with Sen. Italo Luder, leader of the senate and next in line for the presidency, at her residence.

Mrs. Peron reorganized her cabinet Monday and Tuesday for the third time in two months under pressure from the armed forces, the nation's vast labor movement and Peronist congressmen.

Pedro Bonanni, treasury minister for Juan Peron from 1952-57, was sworn in Tuesday as the nation's fourth economy minister in 10 months.

Many critics claimed the reorganization did not go far enough and noted that the new social welfare minister, Rodolfo Roballos, was previously an aide of the controversial Jose Lopez Rega.

Lopez Rega, Mrs. Peron's former private secretary and welfare officer, hastened to Europe over the weekend under what one government critic, the newspaper La Opinion, called direct military pressure.

Also appointed Monday was Jose Stupenengo in the key press secretary's spot.

Lopez Rega, who most political and labor groups said brought on the recent month of crises, reportedly said in Madrid that he was sick with diabetes and went to Juan Peron's former mansion for rest.

Hoffman Named To Head Army

WASHINGTON (AP) — Martin R Hoffmann of McLean, Va., who has been general counsel of the Defense Department, was nominated Tuesday by President Ford to be secretary of the Army.

Hoffmann, 43, who has served in a number of government posts and at one time was legal counsel to Sen. Charles H. Percy, R-Ill., was nominated to succeed Howard H. "Bo," Callaway.

Callaway resigned as Army secretary July 3 to become campaign manager for Ford's presidential bid in 1976.

Cutback Announced In Ammunition Production

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Army announced a sharp cutback in ammunition production Tuesday and said more than 12,000 employes will be laid off as a result.

"The reduction of ammunition production is a direct result of the end of hostilities in Southeast Asia and the fact that American stockpiles are rapidly approaching authorized levels," the announcement said.

Affected will be 14 Army ammunition plants and 32 commercial manufacturers in 19 states.

The 12,000 government and contractor employes who are expected to lose their jobs represent nearly one-third of the work force now engaged in production of Army ammunition of small arms, mortars, tanks and artillery.

About $90 million in contracts will be canceled as a result of what the Army called a "significant reduction" in ammunition production beginning in the next two weeks.

Another $290 million already appropriated by Congress for ammunition will be assigned to other purposes, an Army spokesman said.

Three Army ammunition plants will be mothballed over the next nine months and three others are being studied for possible mothballing. Eight plants will cut back their production, the Army said.

A 15th plant, the Volunteer Army Ammunition Plant in Tennessee, already is operating on a reduced basis, the Army said.

The Army owns 26 ammunition plants which are run by private contractors. Eleven of them already are on a standby basis.

In even of a national emergency, the Army said, the mothballed plants could be brought back into production within four months.

Although the Army has been out of Vietnam for more than two years, it said "it took some time . . . to assess the Army's readiness posture and identified procurements that may have been in long supply."

Due to be mothballed are the Riverback Army Ammunition Plant in California, the Joliet plant at Elwood, Ill., and the Longhorn plant at Marshall, Tex.

Those being studied for possible standby are the Kansas army ammunition plant at Parsons, the Scranton plant in Pennsylvania and the Donovan Projectile Facility, part of the Twin Cities plant at New Brighton, Minn.

Plants scheduled for reduced production are the Indiana Army ammunition plant at Charlestown, the Iowa plant at Burlington, the Louisiana plant at Shreveport, the Lake City plant at Independence, Mo., the Lone Star plant at Texarkana, Tex., the Radford plant in Virginia, the Holston plant at Kingsport, Tenn., and the Milan plant in Tennessee.

The six states in which private manufacturers will suffer loss of business are Florida, Massachusetts, Michigan, Nebraska, New Jersey and New York. The Army did not list the 32 commercial manufacturers involved.

Governors See Double Cross In Health Act

CINCINNATI, Ohio (AP) — Governors attending the Midwestern Governors Conference here Tuesday accused Congress of double crossing the states in the new National Health Planning and Resources Development Act.

A resolution offered by Missouri Gov. Christopher S. Bond said that while the governors generally agree with the intent of the law, its provisions "negate the original intent of this law, as well as the basic concepts of public accountability through locally elected officials."

The act was set up to organize regional health planning systems throughout the United States.

The governors planned to vote Wednesday on the resolution which calls for scrapping of population limits of 500,000 in Health Service Areas, forcing many across state lines. The resolution also calls for rolling back the time limit to implement the program and removing the veto power of the Bureau of Health Planning and Resources Development of the U S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Iowa Gov. Robert D. Ray, chairman of the National Governors Conference, expressed doubt about the need for the law.

"Once the states started doing something in the area of providing health planning care, the federal government moved in and took it away," said the Iowa Republican.

Eugene Rubel, acting director of the bureau of health planning and resources, disputed Ray's claim. The intent, Rubel said, was to do something in the way of providing health care for all citizens because not enough had been done in the private sector.

On the subject of energy, William Watt, assistant to Indiana Gov. Otis Bowen, presented a resolution calling for deregulation for five years of prices at the well head for new gas development plus tax incentives to put profits back into exploration.

Another resolution called for continuation of federal fuel oil and gasoline regulations.

Nebraska Gov. J. James Exon recommended that the energy task force pursue development of wood alcohol taken from wheat as a possible source of energy.

Dr. Ronald Powers, chairman of the land use task force, said there has been little study on land use for the future. He recommended a study in the Midwest, but added that present agricultural acreage should be sufficient through the year 2000 in that part of the country.

James M. Cannon, presidential assistant for domestic affairs, told the governors that the Ford Administration is "an open administration." He said all suggestions and complaints by the governors would be given serious consideration.

"Our concern is to establish the best kind of consultation process possible to enable the states and you as governors to be more directly involved in the decision making process in Washington," Cannon said.

Cannon preceded the appearance of Vice President Nelson Rockefeller at Tuesday's session.

Woman Harbors 51 Dogs

Coffeyville, Kan. (AP) — Hazel Coffey and Coffeyville do not appreciate each other's regard for dogs.

She said she can't live without her canine companions and they can't live without her. She wants to sell her home and move to California with the dogs — all 51.

At the request of the county attorney, Montgomery County District Judge David Scott issued a restraining order that gives her 10 days to get rid of 48 of the animals.

Authorities discovered the menagerie at the home of the 71-year-old woman when they responded to neighbors' complaints nearly two weeks ago.

In August 1972 Mrs. Coffey was fined $150 and given a 30-day suspended jail sentence for harboring unregistered dogs and operating a kennel without a license. Officers said at the time they found 115 dogs at her home, a garage and a nearby vacant house.

Marijuana Plane Lands; 7 Arrested

VICKSBURG, Miss. (AP) — Seven persons were arrested and 2,210 pounds of marijuana worth about $217,000 were confiscated after a plane made a suspicious landing at the Vicksburg airport, the county sheriff said Tuesday.

Warren County Sheriff Paul Barrett said the seven were charged with possession of marijuana with intent to deliver it, a felony.

It was the seventh incident in recent months involving airplanes transporting marijuana, authorities said.

Barrett said a guard at the Vicksburg airport spotted a twin-engine airplane pulling to the end of the runway after landing late Monday night. He said the guard watched as the sacks were unloaded and the plane took off.

"The guard called me and said it looked like something funny going on at the airport," Barrett said.

He identified four of those arrested as Mary Constance Cruikshank, 26, of Chicago; M.D. Johnson, 49, of Rolling Fork, Miss.; Kenneth Erwin Wetzel, 48, of Truth or Consequences, N.M.; and Charles Brown, 25, of Port Gibson, Miss.

"We are holding one more unidentified suspect and two persons were arrested (Monday afternoon) at the Jackson airport while attempting to catch a flight out of town," Barrett said.

He said those arrested were being held on $500,000 bond pending a hearing on the drug charge.

300 Albuquerque Policemen Return To Work

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — "I'm back, but I'm not happy," said one of about 300 officers who returned to work Tuesday ending a 10-day police strike.

Other returning officers said they were satisfied with their new money package but unhappy about the city negotiation effort and the demotion of seven sergeants who had joined the striking patrolmen.

"The city has a police department, but they've taken away its pride and damaged its effectiveness," said president Don Collins of the Albuquerque Police Officers Association.

The seven, who were demoted to patrolmen for four months at which time their status will be reviewed, urged acceptance of the pact.

"I can live with it; why can't you?" former Sgt. Jim Seifert asked strikers before Monday night's 303-125 vote to accept the contract.

Many patrolmen were disgruntled about the action against the sergeants, two of whom were walking downtown beats on Tuesday.

"If we hadn't got the segeants to stand up and tell the people to vote for it, it wouldn't have passed," said one officer.

Federal mediator Lowell McGinnis said, "There was a lot of real deep feeling about the sergeants."

Wayne Crowell, another former sergeant, said, "If I didn't feel that we could still hold this department together by our actions, I wouldn't have helped sell the package."

The two-year agreement that ended the strike provides an across-the board 8 per cent pay raise in addition to 4 per cent merit increases due about 75 per cent of the force; a $30-a-month tax exempt uniform allowance increase, up to $50 a month; a Christmas 1976 bonus equal to 6 per cent of an officer's salary during the preceding six-month period; and reinstatement of the 313 officers who resigned last week in the middle of the strike.

Negotiators said the pay increase and benefits amounted to an 11 per cent increase. Officers demanded a 12 per cent hike in addition to merit pay. The city had been offering an 8 per cent hike.

Tree Trimmer Dies In Omaha

A Lincoln tree trimming business owner died Tuesday afternoon in Omaha when he fell from a tree he was cutting, according to Omaha police.

John Morris, 53, owner of John Morris Tree Service, was killed from the fall from a tree at 505 Happy Hollow Blvd. Morris had been a Lincoln resident 29 years.

He is survived by his wife Grace, three sons, and three daughters. Funeral services are pending.

Rural Lincolnite Injured By Prop

Diving over the side of a motor boat to retrieve a ski rope earned Daniel Vavrana, 24, Route 1, a trip to the hospital Tuesday afternoon.

Vavrana suffered several lacerations and a fracture to his foot when his foot struck the boat's propeller. He had jumped from the boat to recover a tow line while the craft was towing a skier around Capital Beach.

He was listed in fair condition at Lincoln General Hospital.

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE – Here's how to work it:

A X Y D L B A A X R
is L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophes, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

☆ By SIDNEY OMARR ☆

Forecast for Wednesday

Famed fashion designer Mr. Blackwell a Virgo, declares, "Astrology is a vital, pertinent subject, a part of our time and, as such, a part of fashion, too. The value of astrology is that it helps us to better know ourselves. When this happens, we also can know how we look, who we are, what we wear — and in the deepest sense we can then be 'best dressed.'"

☆ ☆ ☆

ARIES (M arch 21-April 19): Your creative juices flow. Nothing is halfway — it is all or nothing. Accent is on love, change, implication, involvement. You take charge, you accept responsibility, you dig beneath the surface. Money and romance intermingle.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You find that what was a losing proposition can be revived, perhaps revitalized, maybe turned into something vital, alive and perhaps even profitable. Accent is on prestige, better relationships with those in authority.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Full Moon emphasizes change, travel, ideas which require testing, further examination. Get to heart of matters. Stress originality and independence. Leo, Aquarius persons figure prominently,. You will be able to imprint your own style.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Money, security dominate. Payments, collections are high on agenda. Aquarian is in picture. You learn by teaching. Means share knowledge. Do some filing; classify information. Take inventory. Protect valuables.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Social activity is featured. You make contacts, exchange ideas and promises. Gemini, Virgo and Sagittarius persons are featured. Your personality shines. Partnershp, marriage questions arise. Vitality makes a comeback. Contract offer should be seriously considered.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Some restrictions are really to your own advantage. Time is on your side. Don't rush. Visit to one confined in home, hospital may be on agenda. Aquarius, Taurus and Scorpio persons figure prominently. You will be able to read between the lines.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Excitement or discovery is featured. Member of opposite sex is likely to be involved. Questions are answered. Your presence is felt. You receive meaingful compliments. Be ready for change, travel, variety. Gemini, Virgo and Sagittarius persons could figure prominently.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Basic issues, including domestic situation, are emphasized. Be considerate of problems faced by family member. Ambition is in picture, but you require cooperation. Don't burn your bridges. Message should become increasingly clear.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Relatives and messages are highlighted. Means you may be busy placating those suffering from cases of "bruised pride." See people in realtistic light. Take cash and let credit go. Avoid self-deception.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Financial picture is more active — and brighter. You may be called upon to organize special project. You have added responsibility and chance for greater reward, too.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Cycle is high — you gain added recognition. Trust judgment, intuition. Sense of timing is sharp — you can be at right place. Partner, mate proves valuable ally. Apparent setback boomerangs in your favor. Aries is involved.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You gain greater understanding of associates, those who share your interests. What seems like routine could actually be an exciting challenge. Know it and apply best methods. Get to heart of matters.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are perceptive, a good reporter and investigator. Gemini, Virgo persons play important roles in your life. October could be an outstanding month this year. You are learning rurth about people and situations. Emotional setback will be overcome. You are planting seeds which will bear fruit next year.

(Learn "The Truth About Astrology." Send 75 cents to Omarr Booklet, P.O. Box 1111, Los Angeles, Calif. 90053. You'll open door to fascinating study and self-revelation!)

Here is a pleasant little game that will give you a message every day. It's a numerical puzzle designed to spell out your fortune. Count the letters in your first name. If the number of letters is 6 or more, subtract 4. If the number is less than 6, add 3. The result is your key number. Start at the upper left-hand corner of the rectangle and check every one of your key numbers, left to right. Then read the message the letters under the checked figures give you.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

☆ By SIDNEY OMARR ☆

Forecast for Wednesday

Famed fashion designer Mr Blackwell a Virgo declares ' Astrology is a vital, pertinent subject a part of our time and, as such a part of fashion too The value of astrology is that it helps us to better know ourselves When this happens we also can know how we look, who we are, what we wear — and in the deepest sense we can then be 'best dressed ' "

☆ ☆ ☆

ARIES (M arch 21-April 19) Your creative juices flow Nothing is halfway — it is all or nothing Accent is on love, change implication involvement You take charge you accept responsibility, you dig beneath the surface Money and romance intermingle

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) You find that what was a losing proposition can be revived perhaps revitalized maybe turned into something vital alive and perhaps even profitable Accent is on prestige, better relationships with those in authority

GEMINI (May 21 June 20) Full Moon emphasizes change travel ideas which require testing further examination Get to heart of matters Stress originality and independence Leo, Aquarius persons figure prominently You will be able to imprint your own style

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Money, security dominate Payments, collections are high on agenda Aquarian is in picture You learn by teaching Means share knowledge Do some filing, classify information Take inventory. Protect valuables

LEO (July 23 Aug 22) Social activity is featured You make contacts, exchange ideas and promises Gemini Virgo and Sagittarius persons are featured Your personality shines Partnership, marriage questions arise Vitality makes a comeback Contract offer should be seriously considered

VIRGO (Aug 23-Sept 22) Some restrictions are really to your own advantage Time is on your side Don't rush Visit to one confined in home, hospital may be on agenda Aquarius Taurus and Scorpio persons figure prominently You will be able to read between the lines

LIBRA (Sept 23 Oct 22) Excitement or discovery is featured Member of opposite sex is likely to be involved Questions are answered Your presence is felt You receive meaningful compliments Be ready for change travel variety Gemini Virgo and Sagittarius persons could figure prominently

SCORPIO (Oct 23 Nov 21) Basic issues including domestic situation are emphasized Be considerate of problems faced by family member Ambition is in picture but you require cooperation Don t burn your bridges Message should become increasingly clear.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec 21) Relatives and messages are highlighted Means you may be busy placating those suffering from cases of "bruised pride " See people in realistic light Take cash and let credit go Avoid self-deception

CAPRICORN (Dec 22-Jan 19) Financial picture is more active — and brighter You may be called upon to organize special project You have added responsibility and chance for greater reward too

AQUARIUS (Jan 20-Feb 18) Cycle is high — you gain added recognition Trust judgment Intuition Sense of timing is sharp — you can be at right place Partner, mate proves valuable ally Apparent setback boomerangs in your favor Aries is involved

PISCES (Feb 19-March 20) You gain greater understanding of associates, those who share your interests What seems like routine could actually be an exciting challenge Know it and apply best methods Get to heart of matters.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are perceptive, a good reporter and investigator Gemini, Virgo persons play important roles in your life October could be an outstanding month this year You are learning rurth about people and situations Emotional setback will be overcome You are planting seeds which will bear fruit next year

Here is a pleasant little game that will give you a message every day. It's a numerical puzzle designed to spell out your fortune. Count the letters in your first name. If the number of letters is 6 or more, subtract 4. If the number is less than 4, add 3. This result is your key number. Start at the upper left-hand corner of the rectangle and check every one of your key numbers, left to right. Then read the message the letters under the checked figures give you.
